The kind manner in which the "PROGRESSIVE TELUGU GRAMMAR" has been received, and the very favourable opinions* of it which have been expressed by many competent Critics, have encouraged the Author to publish this book of Exercises, which professes to be of an elementary character only. It consists of two parts.

PART I supplies the Telugu Student with numerous illustrations of the rules taught in the successive chapters of PART II of the Progressive Telugu Grammar, while at the same time it supplies a useful series of progressive Exercises in colloquial Telugu. Besides some explanatory foot-notes, more than 1500 references to the Grammar are inserted in the text, which not only exemplify the rules, but also help the Student to become familiar with the Grammar, and to refer to the rules without difficulty.

The Exercises are written in colloquial Telugu, and most of the conversations have been written by Natives, entirely ignorant of English. They are therefore thoroughly idiomatic, and in accordance with Native forms of thought and of expression, a feature which is peculiarly wanting in most exercise books hitherto published, in which the conversations are merely translations of essentially English conversations.

The Exercises are not very numerous, because the Author's great desire is to impress upon the Student the supreme importance of thoroughly mastering whatever is read. Each exercise ought to be studied carefully several times, and if committed to memory, so much the better.

PART II is merely a translation of the Exercises given in chapter xviii of the Grammar.

The Manuscript has been circulated in several parts of the Telugu country, and thus the book has been made suitable to all localities. It has been read and revised by many competent persons, both European and Native, and will, it is hoped, prove a valuable help to the Telugu Student.

ARDEN'S TELUGU GRAMMAR.

PART I.

Part I of this book consists of a series of Exercises in illustration of the successive chapters of PART II of the Grammar.

Whilst studying chapters V and VI of the Grammar, the Student should learn to the end of Exercise 8 ; but as the first three Exercises are on pronunciation only, they may also be read with advantage immediately after mastering the Alphabet.

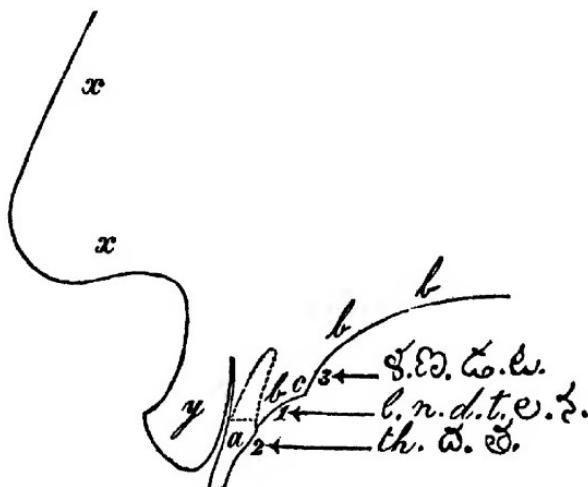

Exercise I.

This exercise is upon the pronunciation of the letters ఏ. న.
ద. త. శ. ళ. డ. ట. Until these have been thoroughly mastered, it is impossible to speak Telugu correctly, for the chief peculiarity in the sound of the language consists in the right pronunciation of these letters. The meaning also of a word not unfrequently depends upon whether the sound of the letter be harsh or smooth ;
e. g. ఎండు a fountain, ణితు a fish-trap ; టాడు he will not come,
రాదు it will not come.

It is not too much to say that the great bulk of foreigners pronounce these letters incorrectly. The reason often is that the Native Munshi takes it for granted that a foreigner cannot master them, and therefore he does not use sufficient care to point out the exact pronunciation, or to explain how that pronunciation can be effected by the vocal organs.

In pronouncing these letters much depends upon the right position of the tongue. The following diagram therefore will give much assistance.

In the above diagram, which shows the shape of the upper part of the human mouth, x x represents the nose, y the upper lip, a the front tooth in the upper row, b. b. b. the roof of the mouth, c the angle or corner in the roof of the mouth near the back of the top row of front teeth.

I. The figure 1 marks the place where the upper side of the tip of the tongue strikes against the roof of the mouth, in pronouncing the English letters l, n, d, t, and the Telugu letters ఎ, న. Pronounce the following words, carefully noticing the position of the tongue—lull, nun, dull, tun, లంక, నక. Hence there is no difficulty in pronouncing ఎ and న, as they are just the same as the English letters l and n. Carefully pronounce the following words—ఎగు pull (thru,) కాలు a leg, పిల్ల a child, నార fibre, వని work, వన్చు a tax.

II. The figure 2 marks the place where the upper side of the tip of the tongue strikes against the back of the top row of front teeth, in pronouncing the English letters th as in thus (pronounced dhus), and the Telugu letters ద and త. Pronounce the following words carefully noticing the position of the tongue—Thus, దంపు, తక్కిన. There is no difficulty in pronouncing ద, as there is the corresponding sound in English, namely th (pronounced dh) as in thus. Though త has no exactly corresponding sound in English, yet its pronunciation is not difficult, as it is pronounced with the tongue exactly in the same position as in pronouncing ద. Carefully pronounce the following words—దాకు until, దూడి cotton, వది ten, బీద poor, గేద a she-buffalo, చెదు bitter, పెద్ద large, తేలు a scorpion, తాను self, తోకు a tail, తల్లి a mother, తివ్వా turn (thou), తాత a grandfather, పాత old, కోతి a monkey, కత్తి a knife, ఉత్తరము a letter.

III. The figure 3 marks the place where the under side of the tip of the tongue strikes against the roof of the mouth, above the angle marked c, in pronouncing the letters శ, ఱ, ద, ట. The tongue must be well curled back. As there are no corresponding sounds in English, the greatest care and patience must be exercised in acquiring correctly these essentially foreign pronunciations. Carefully pronounce the following words—టమాట్లు sons, కాట్లు legs, పేట్లు names, కొట్లు fouls, తాట్లు ropes, నీట్లు water, గూట్లు nests, వేట్లు fingers, వెట్లు go (thou), వెట్లుతాను I shall go, వెళ్లినాను I went, మొనట్లు crocodiles, నెమట్లు peacocks, వేళ్ల తిమ్మ time, తాళము a lock, సుభువు easy, నిష్టుళము gentle,—వీళ a lute, వాళ్మి him, అత్యాళ్మి him, బాణము an arrow, బుణము a debt, గుణము a quality, పుణ్యము merit, ప్రమాణము an oath, ప్రయాణము a journey, వ్యాకరణము grammar, అణా an anna, ఉచ్చారణ pronunciation—గోడ a wall, బేడ a two-anna piece, నేడు today, తవుడు bran, అడుగు a foot measure, దూడు a calf, తాడు a rope, పాడు waste land, మూడు three, గాడిదె an ass, గొడుగు an umbrella, కాడి a yoke, ఖడ్డి grass, ఒడ్డు a bank, ఆడవాండ్లు women, గుడ్లు an egg, గుడ్లు eggs, పండ్లు fruits, వేట a town district, ఊటు a fountain, కోటు a fort, వేటు hunting, తోటు a garden, తేటు clear, ఆటు play, పోటు పాటు ebb and flow.

The curling back of the tongue to pronounce these letters often gives to the preceding letter almost the sound of the English letter r (not the Scotch), as in bear, pear. Thus వేర్లు sounds something like pear-llu. So వేట pear-ter, వీర veer-ner, కోర్లు core-ter or caw-ter, బేడ bear-der.

Exercise II.

The following examples shew how the meaning of a word often depends upon the correct pronunciation.

ముల్లు	a thorn.	ముర్లు	thorns.
పల్లు	a tooth.	పర్లు	teeth.
కల్లు	a pebble.	కర్లు	pebbles.

మంద	a flock.	మండ.....	a bough.
వాడి.....	a plaintiff.	వాడి	sharp.

Exercise III.

Great care must be taken to pronounce the aspirate letters correctly. Read para 51 of the Grammar. Examples—ఫలము fruit, భాష language, భక్తి reverence, భయము fear, సభ an assembly, ఇచ్ఛ desire, శుభము clean, ముఖ్యము special, శీఘ్రము quick, భర్తము care.

In the following examples great care must be taken to put the tongue in the right position, especially in pronouncing the letters శ and ష.

ధర price, ప్రధాని a prime-minister, ధైర్యము bravery, బూధ trouble, విధేయత obedience, విధవ a widow, వీధి a street, బుధి intelligence, కథ a story, రథము a chariot, రూఢి certain, పారము a lesson, కరిసము difficult.

Exercise IV.

An English TRANSLATION of all the exercises that follow will be found at the end of the Telugu exercises. The numbers placed after the sentences refer to the paragraphs of the Grammar.

“Quality not quantity” should be the motto of the student. The exercises therefore are not very numerous, but they should be thoroughly mastered. After learning to read each sentence with a perfectly accurate pronunciation, the student should translate them into English, examine the construction, write them out in Telugu, and then turn to the English translation, and retranslate them from English into Telugu. In many cases also they may with advantage be committed to memory.

Exercise XXX.

The fifteen following exercises are in illustration of Chapter xvi of the Grammar, which treats of NOUN SENTENCES. Before commencing them, read to the end of para 565 of the Grammar.

The following 'conversation' is between two respectable Hindoos named Rāmayya (రా), and Krishnayya (కృ), who meet at a distance from their respective homes which are in neighbouring villages.

రా. భువ్యా! కృష్ణయ్యారూ! (849) మండును మూత్రి, చూలు దివములు అయినది. (409). ఇస్కుప్పిల్లి యొక్కాన్ని వెల్లినారు? ముక్కుడా కనుతడడము లేదో? (ఇన్నికూనాట్లు.) 169. 362.

కృ. యేమా (a). తెలియదాడి ఉదరపోవ్వార్థము (b.). వెల్లిం- టిని. 662. 357.

రా. ఇప్పుడు మీరు యొక్కడనుంచి రావడము? 351. (ఏనున్నారు?)

కృ. మా గ్రామమునుంచే.

రా. మీ వారందరూ నుభముగా ఉన్నారా? 310. (వారు+లందరు.)

కృ. మీ కట్టాడుమువల్ల నుభముగా ఉన్నారు.

రా. శేషయ్యగారు మొదలయినవారు బాగా ఉన్నారా?

కృ. ఇప్పుడు వారు చాలా భాగ్యవంతులు అయినారే! (236.) ఆ
సంగతి మిాకు తెలియదా? 350.

రా. అట్లాగా! అంత బీదవారికి యేలాగు భాగ్యము వచ్చినదో,
ఆశ్చర్యముగా ఉన్నది. 562.

కృ. యేమి ఆశ్చర్యము? ఈ సంవత్సరము వారి భూములు అన్నీ
బాగా పండినవి. దానివల్ల చాలా సొమ్మ దౌరికినది.

రా. మా గ్రామము యేలాగు పండినదో, ఆ సంగతి తెలు-
నునా? 564.

కృ. అది యేలాగు పండినదో, నాకు తెలియదు. 562.

రా. మా చిన్నవాడు ఉండో ఉన్నాడో, లేడో, ఆ సంగతి యేమ-
యినా మిాకు తెలునునా? (Ond. ఉండిలో) 565.

కృ. లేసట్టున్నది. 508. (లేసట్టు+ఉన్నది.)

రా. యొక్కాడికి వెల్లినాడో, (మీరు) లీనలేదా? 562.

కృ. వినలేదు.

రా. ఇప్పుడు మీరు యొక్కాడికి వెల్లుతారు?

కృ. మా కూతురి ఉండికి వెల్లుతాను.

రా. అక్కడ జగ్గరాళగారి కూతురికి దుష్టుడు లివాచుము లేసా-
డా, తెలునుకొని వస్తారా? 562.

కృ. అవో దానికేమి! తెలునుకొని వస్తాను. (ధానికి+యేమి.)

రా. మీతో కూడా వచ్చినవారు యెవరిఁ, కనుక్కొన్నారా? 445.

562. 259.

కృ. యెవరిఁ తెలియలేదు గాని, వారు బహు మంచివారు. 562.

రా. మీరు మళ్ళీ యెప్పుడు వస్తారు? ఒక సెల పట్టునా?

కృ. యెందుకండీ సెల దినములు? అయిదొరు దినములలో వస్తాను.
(యెందుకు+అండి. 240.) (అయిదు+ఆరు.)

రా. వచ్చేటప్పుడు, మా ఊరికి వస్తారా? 485.

కృ. ఈ మాగాకాన వసే, మీ ఊరికి రాకపోను. 123. 519. 729.

రా. ఈ మాగాకానే రండి: 236.

కృ. అప్పును (248). నారు ఈ మాగామే బాగా ఉన్నది గాని,
మా కూతురికి ఇష్టమన్నస్తూ, కాదో, తెలియదు. 565.

రా. యేమో (a). వసే మాత్రము, మా ఊరికి రాకుండా పోవద్దు.
519. 410. 367.

కృ: అందేమి (c)? అట్లా సెలవు ఇస్తారూ (d)! ఈ మాగాకాన వసే,
రాకుండా పోతానా? అవక్ష్యము వస్తాను. 519. 410.

రా. మంచిది. వ్యోరండి. సేను చెప్పినది మాత్రము మరిచిపో-
కండి. 447. 284.

NOTE. (a) See note on exercise 18. (b) ఉచరికు+పోసించు+అర్థము. 968. 662.
For the nourishment of the stomach. (c) అంది+యెమ. Lit. That (is) what? i.e. What do you mean by that? (d) ఎంగ ఇష్టుపి is a polite form for ఇష్టుపి. (Lit. To give permission.) Will you really say so? The tone of the voice and the lengthening of the final letter implies a question.

Exercise XXIII.

N B.—In all Exercises consisting of a story, first a Literal Translation is given, and then a Free Translation.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A boy having gone to a garden, there having seen a good (piece of) fruit on a mango tree, went to cut it ; but there were thorn bushes round the tree, therefore having feared at those thorns, he went away without cutting for himself the (piece of) fruit. Then another boy having seen that (piece of) fruit, not having feared at the thorns, having climbed the mango tree, having cut for himself the (piece of) fruit, ate it up. Therefore gain will accrue to brave men.

FREE TRANSLATION. A boy went to a garden, and seeing there a nice mango upon a tree, went to gather it. But there were some thorn bushes round the tree ; so he was afraid of them, and went away without gathering the mango. Then another boy saw the mango, and not being afraid of the thorns, he climbed the tree, and gathered the mango, and ate it up. Thus the brave will succeed. (compare. "Fortune favours the brave.")

Exercise XXIV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In Benares there was a learned man. To him (there were) two sons. He having given all his property to his big son, caused learning to be told well to the little one. The big one in a few days having expended all his property, became a poor man. The little one, having prepared for himself much money by his learning, was happy. Therefore than wealth learning (is) good.

FREE TRANSLATION. In Benares there lived a learned man, who had two sons. To the elder one he gave all his property, and to the younger one he gave a good education. The elder one having expended all his property in a few days, became a poor man. The younger one having gained much wealth by his learning, lived in comfort. Hence learning is better than wealth.

Exercise XXV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A king having-caused-to-be-brought (262) a Margosa seed, having-caused-to-be-made (262) a flower-bed with sugar in his palace, having put that seed in it, having poured rose-water, was rearing (it) very carefully. Afterwards upon that tree both flowers and fruit abounded. Then that king having cause-to-be-brought one (piece of) fruit, put (it) into his mouth. But it was very bitter, but any sweetness did not appear. Therefore by the intercourse of good people bad people will not let go their bad qualities.

FREE TRANSLATION. A certain king procured a Margosa seed, and had a flower-bed made with sugar in his palace. In this he sowed the seed, and watered it with rose-water, and reared it very carefully. After a time there was an abundance of flowers and fruit upon the tree. Then the king had a piece of the fruit brought to him, and put it in his mouth. But (in spite of all that had been done) instead of being sweet, it was still very bitter. Hence bad men will not get rid of their bad qualities by holding intercourse with good people.

Exercise XXVI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a jungle there was a tiger. It not have respected any amongst the beasts there, was troubling all. One day that tiger having seen an ox, (while) jumping upon it, by chance having missed (its) aim, fell into a deep pit on the other side. Then all the beasts having found it out, all having assembled, having come (to) there, having each taken up a stone, threw (it) upon it (i. e. the tiger). Afterwards that pit having become filled, (its) breath not having turned, the tiger died. Therefore even to a very strong man the enmity of many people is not suitable.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain jungle there was a tiger, which did not respect any of the other beasts there, but was continually troubling them. One day this tiger saw an ox, and whilst springing upon it, unfortunately missed its aim, and fell into a deep pit on the other side. Then all the other beasts having found this out, assembled together, and went to the place, and each taking up a stone, threw it upon the tiger. Thereupon the pit became filled up (with stones), and the tiger died of suffocation. Hence it is not advisable for even a very powerful man to have many enemies.

Exercise XXVII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. With a Sudra there was a black dog. He to make it white, having taken it each day to the river, was scrubbing it until many days, but it went not having become white. Therefore (we) must not make an attempt to do impossible works.

FREE TRANSLATION. A certain Sudra had a black dog. In order to make it white, he took it daily to the river, and kept scrubbing it for several days ; but it did not become white. Hence we must not attempt to do impossibilities.

Exercise XXVIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. One day some boys playing on the bank of a tank, having seen frogs in that tank, having taken stones, were throwing (them) upon them. Then one amongst those frogs having looked at those boys—"O boys, striking us with stones is to you as play, but by it our lives are going"—thus said.

FREE TRANSLATION. One day some boys whilst playing on the bank of a pond, saw some frogs in it ; and (so) they took some stones, and were throwing them at the frogs. Thereupon one of the frogs looking at them, said—"O boys! it is a sport to you to stone us, but it costs us our lives."

Exercise XXIX.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A man having seen a scorpion falling into the fire—by rescuing it merit will come—thus having thought, having taken hold of that scorpion, saved (it). It not having considered that kindness, by stinging his hand he suffered much pain. Therefore we must be very careful in doing a kindness to wicked persons.

FREE TRANSLATION. A certain man saw a scorpion fall into the fire, and thinking that he would obtain merit by rescuing it, he took hold of it, and saved it. But instead of being mindful of the kindness, it stung his hand, and so caused him much pain. Hence we must be very careful in doing a kindness to wicked persons.

Exercise XXX.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A monkey having sat down on the bank of a well, eating a mango-fruit, peeped into that well. Then his own shadow appeared in the water. Therefore—within another monkey is eating a mango-fruit : having frightened it, let us take-for-ourselves that fruit also—thus having thought, having opened (its) mouth, screamed out loudly. Then the fruit of its mouth having fallen into the well, by (its) sinking, that monkey grieved very much. Therefore by coveting the goods of others, one's own goods will go.

FREE TRANSLATION. A Monkey sat down on the bank of a well, and peeped into it, whilst eating a mango. Thereupon its own shadow was reflected in the water, and so it thought within itself—another monkey inside the well is eating a mango, if I frighten it, I shall get that mango also. The monkey therefore opened its mouth, and screamed out loudly. Then the mango which was in its mouth fell into the water, and sank; and so the monkey was greatly grieved. Hence by coveting what is another's, we shall lose what is our own.

Exercise XXXI.

- E. Who are you ?
 M. I am a shoemaker.
 E. Why have you come ? What do you want ?
 M. The Butler called me to repair the lady's saddle.
 E. Very well. Go, and bring the saddle. (Lit. Having gone.)
 M. I have brought it, Sir. Look, Sir. There is a great deal of work to be done to it. (Lit. Behold ! There is much work.)
 E. Shew (me). All right. Take it home, and repair it, and bring it this evening. (Lit. Having taken, etc.)
 M. Very well, Sir. There is a great deal of work. It will not be finished by this evening, Sir. I will bring it without fail to-morrow evening.
 E. Is there so much work (as that) ? Shew (it to me) again. Yes. What you say is true. There is a great deal of work (to be done to it). You may bring it to-morrow. (Lit. The word which you said is truth.)
 M. Very good, Sir. Please give me two rupees to buy leather.
 E. All right. I will (give). Look ! You must bring it without fail to-morrow evening.
 M. I will, Sir. (Lit. Your will, Sir.)

Exercise XXXII.

- E. How much wages do you ask a month ?
 S. I leave that to you, Sir. (Lit. Master's will.)
 E. Very good. I will see the work you do, and pay you accordingly. (Lit. Having seen the work which you do, I will give you a pay which suits.)
 S. Very well, Sir.
 E. Do you know Tamil ? (Lit. Does Tamil come to you ?)
 S. No Sir, I only know Telugu. (Lit. Tamil does not come, Sir. Telugu only comes.)
 E. To-morrow morning you must wake me at five o'clock.
 S. Very well, Sir.
 E. What o'clock is it now ? (Lit. Now how many hours have been finished ?)
 S. Five o'clock, Sir.

- E. Is it raining ? (Lit. Is the rain raining ?)
 S. It is not raining now, Sir. It kept raining all night, but has now stopped. (Lit. Having rained, having rained.)
 E. I am obliged to go to the Fort this morning. Go and see whether the groom is putting the horse in the carriage. (Lit. It is necessary for me to go to the fort this morning. Perhaps the horse-keeper is tying the horse to the bandy, having seen, come.)
 S. He is putting (it) in, Sir.—To-day my elder brother's wife died, and so I want leave till to-morrow, Sir.
 E. I do not understand what you say. Speak a little more slowly. (Lit. The thing which you said was not known (to me. Speak a little slowly.)
 S. I beg your pardon, Sir. I want leave to-day, Sir. (Lit. Your will, Sir.)
 E. Why ?
 S. My elder brother's wife has died, and so I must go there, Sir.
 E. Very well. I (will) give you leave ; but you must come again to-morrow at ten o'clock.
 S. Thank you, Sir. I will come to-morrow without fail at 10 o'clock.
 E. Who brought this note ?
 S. A peon brought (it), Sir.
 E. There is no answer. The peon may go.
 S. Very good, Sir.
 E. Whose is that walking-stick ?
 S. It is the peon's who brought that note.
 E. Call (him); Cal! (him). Perhaps he has gone away.
 S. He has not gone yet, Sir. See he is (here.).

Exercise XXXIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a village a man having brought a young snake, having poured milk for it continually, kept rearing it. The snake which he had reared in a few days having become a big one, one day having raised (its) hood, was playing. Having seen it, he having greatly rejoiced, having lifted up that snake, kissed (it). Then by that snake biting him, he died. Therefore (we) must not make companionship with those possessing a bad disposition.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain village a man brought a young snake, and reared it, feeding it continually with milk. In a few days the snake which he had (thus) reared, came to its full size, and raising its hood, began to play about. When the man saw it, he was very pleased, and lifted up the snake, and kissed it. Whereupon the snake gave him a bite from which he died. Hence we must not keep company with persons who have bad dispositions.

Exercise XXXIV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A crow having laid eggs in a hollow of a banyan tree, went for food. Then a snake having come out of a hole which was under that tree, eat up all those eggs. The crow having seen it, having grieved very much, having made an endeavour to kill it, by there not being to it the power, not having thought anything, was considering (the matter). Afterwards, some travellers having come into the tank which was near there, having taken off the pearl necklaces which they wore on the neck, having caused them to be on the bank, went to make bathing. Immediately that crow having come, having picked up with (its) beak one amongst the pearl necklaces which they kept upon the bank, let (it) fall into the hole under that banyan tree. Those travellers having seen that, having come immediately, having dug up that hole, having killed the snake, took away their jewel. Therefore strength of mind is strength ; but strength of body is not strength.

FREE TRANSLATION. A crow laid her eggs in a hollow in a banyan tree, and went to get some food. Thereupon a snake came out of a hole, which was under the tree, and eat up the eggs. When the crow saw what had been done, it was very much grieved, and endeavoured to kill the snake ; but as it had not the power, it was considering the matter, not knowing what to do. Soon afterwards some travellers came to a pond which was in the vicinity, and having taken off the pearl necklaces which they wore on their necks, they put them upon the bank, and proceeded to bathe. The crow immediately came, and picked with its beak one of the pearl necklaces which they had put upon the bank, and dropped it into the hole under the Banyan tree. The travellers seeing it, went at once, and dug up the hole, and killed the snake, and took away the jewels. Thus strength of mind is true strength, not strength of body.

Exercise XXXV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a village there was a Sudra. With him there was a mungoose. He was rearing it very carefully. One day there came to him a work, by which it was necessary to go to another village. Therefore he went, having entrusted that mungoose to his wife. The next day she having put her child to sleep in a cradle, having put that mungoose as a guard near the cradle, went to come, having drawn for herself water. In that time a snake came to near the cradle, in which the child was sleeping. That mungoose having seized that snake, having made it pieces, having thrown it away, went to near her, to make known to the mother the thing which had taken place. Then she having seen the blood, which had stuck to that mungoose's snout,—It has bitten and killed self's child—thus having thought, having beaten that mungoose, killed (it). Afterwards having gone to the house, having seen the child, which was sleeping happily in the cradle, and near the cradle the snake, which the mungoose having seized, had killed; (she) grieved very much.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain village there was a Sudra, who had a mungoose, which he reared very carefully. One day he had some business, which obliged him to go to another village; so he left the mungoose in his wife's charge, and set off. The next day she put her child to sleep in a cradle, and having put the mungoose near the cradle to guard it, she went to draw water. Just then a snake approached the cradle, in which the child was sleeping. The mungoose (at once) seized it, and having torn it to pieces, and thrown it away, went to the child's mother, to tell her what had taken place. As soon as she saw the blood, which was sticking to the snout of the mungoose, she thought that it had bitten and killed her child, and so she beat the mungoose to death. Afterwards, when she entered the house, and saw her child sleeping happily in the cradle, and near it the snake, which the mungoose had seized, and killed, she was very sorry.

Exercise XXXVI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a village a Sanyási having got for himself much money, having changed it all as mohurs, having put those mohurs in torn cloths, having joined them all together as one, having sewn a quilt, was spreading it as a bed. A bachelor some how or other having known that thing, having designed to take for himself this quilt (after) having deceived him, having slowly approached near him, having begun to do service as a disciple, by degrees made confidence in him to accrue. Afterwards to that Sanyási there came a business, by which it was necessary to go to another village. Therefore having given to the hand of this bachelor his sacred box and all other things, he went, having taken him (the bachelor) with him; but that quilt only he himself carried. In this manner they having gone some distance, having alighted in a certain village, having taken food, having started again, were going in the way. Afterwards, that bachelor having seen a needle which had stuck in the bundle, having drawn it out, having shewn (it) to the Sanyási, having run, having thrown it down in the place in which they lodged, having run back, came. Then much (more) confidence in him than formerly having accrued to that Sanyási, having given to his hand the mohur quilt also, which he himself was carrying, he was walking comfortably. The next day, they having alighted at another village, having taken food, having started, were going (along). That day also that bachelor having taken out of the bundle a little spoon which was not theirs, having shown it to the Sanyasi, ran to come back, (after) having given it. Afterwards that Sanyasi, having walked a little time, looked round. But in the mean-time that bachelor had run away some where or other. Therefore (we) must be careful in reference to money.

FREE TRANSLATION: In a certain village a Hermit having made a great deal of money, changed it all into (gold) mohurs (=15 rupees), and put them in some old cloths, and sewed them all up into a quilt, which he was wont to use as a bed. Some how or other a certain bachelor found this out, and made a plot to deceive him; and take away the quilt. Having therefore quietly gained access to him, he waited on him as a disciple, and gradually gained his confidence. After a time, business obliged the Hermit to go to another village; and so he set out, and gave his sacred box and all other things into his disciple's hands, but the quilt only he carried himself. In this manner they went some distance, and then halted in a certain village, and took their food, and proceeded on their journey. Then the bachelor seeing a needle sticking in their bundle, drew it out, and having shewn it to the Hermit, ran and threw it down in the place in which they had halted, and then ran back again to the Hermit. Then the Hermit placed more confidence in him than before, and gave into his hand the mohur quilt also, which he had (hitherto) carried himself, and walked along without any incumbrance. The next-day they halted at another village, and after taking their food, started again, and proceeded on their journey. That day too the bachelor took out of their bundle a little spoon, which did not belong to them, and having shown it to the Hermit, ran off to give it (to its proper owner). Soon after the Hermit after walking on a little distance, looked around; but in-the-mean-time the bachelor had run off somewhere or other. Therefore in reference to money we must exercise great care.

Exercise XXXVII.

- E. Who is that man in the verandah? (Lit. Who is he, who is in the verandah?)
 H. He is my servant.
 E. What work does he do? (Lit. He (is) one who does what work?)
 H. I appointed him to do, whatever I told him. (Lit. To do the work, which I said.)
 E. Is he a trustworthy man?
 H. He is the most trustworthy of all my servants. (Lit. Amongst all my servants he is a trustworthy man.)
 E. How many more servants have you besides him? (Lit. how many servants are there yet to you?)
 H. Six.

- E. Why have you so many servants ?
 H. Dear me ! Is there not need (of them) ?
 E. What work do they all do ?
 H. One is a cook. (Lit. one who does cooking.) One is a man who brings vegetables from the bazaar. One is a waterman. Two are horsekeepers. One is a female who sweeps and cleans the house. (Lit. Smears it with cowdung water.)
 E. But I suppose you have several horses.
 H. Oh, no ! I have only two (horses).
 E. Have you any cows, etcetera ?
 H. I have two cows.
 E. How many measures of milk do these cows give daily ?
 H. One gives two measures, and the second gives one measure.
 E. But why have you two horses ?
 H. One is for the carriage, and one for riding.

Exercise XXXVIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a town to a Chetty (there were) two sons. One day they both having joined together, went to a Komaty's house. At that time the people of that house having opened the door, had gone somewhere or other. Then the old one having seen the fact that no one was in the house, having kept the young one there, to make known to the people of the house the matter about which they came, himself went away. Afterwards, the young one having stopped some time, owing to none of the people of the house coming, having stolen a cloth among the cloths which had been put to dry upon the line in that house, having put it under his arm, went (away). Having seen it, his parents not having punished him, having consented to that which he had done, rejoiced much. Afterwards, in a few more days that boy not having known the harm which comes through theft, one day having gone to a rich man's house, having bored a hole at night, stole much money. Then the people of the house having seen him, having seized him, made (him) the charge of Government. (i. e. handed him over to the civil authorities.) They having made an enquiry, for fifteen years having put on fetters, put him to hard labour. That boy's parents having seen it, grieved very much. Therefore parents without being pleased at the theft which their children have committed, having punished them, must cause (them) to walk in a good way from childhood.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain town there lived a man of the Chetty caste, who had two sons. One day they both went together to a shopkeeper's house ; but just at that time the people of the house had gone away somewhere or other leaving the door open. Then the elder brother seeing that no one was at home, left his younger brother there, to tell the people of the house the matter, about which they had come, and then went away. After staying some time, the younger brother, as none of the people of the house came, stole one of the cloths which had been put to dry upon the clothes-line in the house, and putting it under his arm, walked off. When his parents saw it, instead of punishing him, they consented to what he had done, and were very much pleased. After a few days the boy not knowing the evil that results from thieving, went one day to a rich man's house, and broke into it at night, and stole a great deal of money. The people of the house caught sight of him, and seized him, and handed him over to the police. The matter was inquired into, and he was put in fetters, and imprisoned for fifteen years. The boy's parents seeing this, were filled with grief. Therefore parents should not be pleased at any theft committed by their children, but should punish them, and make them walk in the right path from earliest childhood.

Exercise XXXIX.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A washerman having asked for all the dirty cloths which were in the villages which were about that neighbourhood, in order to clean them, having put them on an ass which was strong, having taken them to (his) house, having washed (them) well, having bleached (them), having folded (them), having put (them) again upon the same ass, having taken (them), was giving to each his cloth. In this way even in old age that ass, great confidence in its master having accrued (to it), without any hindrance to his work, kept carrying (it) on. Afterwards, one day that ass walked tottering, owing to there not being power in its body by reason of old age. Having seen it, that washerman, not having even a little considered one that for so many days had carried (burdens) without even being driven, being an ungrateful man, struck that ass a heavy blow with a stick. The beating in this manner for such a little fault a servant, which had ever served faithfully, is not good. Therefore all the people in the world blamed him. Therefore one must serve a lord to whom there is good wisdom ; but one must not serve a lord, who is foolish like this washerman.

FREER TRANSLATION. A certain washerman collected for the wash all the dirty cloths from the neighbouring villages, and put them on a strong donkey, and took them (away) to his home. After he had washed, bleached, and folded them, he put them again upon the same donkey, and took them, and distributed them to their several owners. In this way the donkey, which put great confidence in its master, carried on even in its old age its master's work, without any let or hindrance. As time went on, the donkey one day walked with tottering steps, as it felt very weak through old age. When the washerman saw it, instead of treating with consideration one that had for so long carried burdens so willingly (Lit. without even being driven along), he was most ungrateful, and struck the donkey a heavy blow with his stick. It was very wrong to strike in this manner for such a little fault a servant that had always served (its master) so faithfully; and so every one blamed him. Thus we must seek to serve a wise master, not a foolish one like the washerman.

Exercise XL.

- E. You know the Brahmins in this country have privileged villages, and glebe lands. Who gave them to them? (Lit. In this country there are to the Brahmins Agraharams and manyams, is it not so? They (are) those which who gave?)
 H. Pashas bestowed them upon some, and Zemindars upon others. (Lit. (some are) those which Pashas gave to some, (others are) those which Zemindars gave to some.)
 E. In bestowing these lands, did they give them on a small quit rent, or with a fee upon it?
 H. [redacted] some (they gave them) on a small quit rent, to some with a fee upon it. Each got as luck would have it. (Lit. To them severally as their fate was, so it was obtained.)
 E. Who gave these domains to the Zemindars?
 H. These too were the gifts of the Pashas. (Lit. (These are) those which Pashas gave to them also.)
 E. Did Zemindars also formerly pay land-tax to the Nabob?
 H. Some did, and some did not. (Lit. There were some paying, there were some not paying.)
 E. Why did some not pay?
 H. The Pashas shewed this favour to some. (Lit. To the Pashas favour towards some accrued.)
 E. But now do they all pay land-tax to Government?
 H. Whoever did not pay it formerly, does not pay now.
 E. Why did the Nabob or the Zemindars give to the Brahmins these lands, Agraharams, etc.?
 H. They made the Pundits hold learned disputations, and rewarded them in proportion to their learning.
 E. Is the Nabob now in the habit of giving them to any one?
 H. I do not know about the Nabob, but his Dewan gives them.
 E. Does he give them with or without the Nabob's knowledge?
 (Lit. The fact that he gives, (is it) having informed the Nabob, or not having informed?)
 H. I do not know.

Exercise LI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A merchant,—trade in the village in which he himself was, not having progressed,—went to another village. Then on the way having seen a bundle which had fallen (Lit. which was having fallen,) under a tree on the bank of a tank, having opened it, as (he) looked, there were some cloths in it, and a bag, in which there were two hundred pagodas (i. e. R. 15 pieces). Having taken them, having again started, having gone into the village, to which he was going to make trade, as soon as (he) made known this thing to those village-people, the owner of the money having come, having made known to him fully the fact that he had come, having forgotten it (i. e. the bag) upon the bank of a tank on the way, as he was coming from another village, as he shewed proof, he gave away that bundle to him. Afterwards, the owner of the money having opened the bag of pagodas which was in that bundle, as he proceeded to give to that benefactor twenty pagodas, he did not consent to take them; therefore he proceeded to give him ten pagodas. By his not consenting to this also, having thrown down that bundle, as he spoke harsh words, having taken those ten rupees, he divided them amongst the poor. Therefore (we) must make an endeavour to do a return kindness to those, who have done a kindness (to us).

FREE TRANSLATION. A merchant not being able to carry on trade successfully in his own village, went to another village. On the road he saw a bundle, which had fallen down under a tree on the bank of a pool. When he opened it, and looked, there were in it some cloths, and a bag containing two hundred pagodas. He took the things, and starting off again, went to the village in which he was going to trade. As soon as he had informed the village people of the circumstance, the owner of the goods came, and gave him a detailed account of how he had, whilst coming from a certain village, forgotten the bundle, (and left it) upon the bank of a pool in the way. As he gave satisfactory proofs (of the truth of the statement), he gave him the bundle. Thereupon the owner of the goods opened the bag of pagodas, which was in the bundle, and proceeded to present his benefactor with twenty pagodas, but he did not consent to take them. He then offered him ten; but as he still refused, he threw down the bundle, and began to upbraid him. So he took the ten pagodas, and divided them amongst the poor. Thus we must endeavour to requit our benefactors.

Exercise XLIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION: At a certain time a louse having come into the mattress, on which a king was accustomed to lie,—having lay hid in that mattress on one side, without it being known to any one,—having waited until the king having come at night, having lain down, went to sleep,—having gently bit the king, after he had gone to sleep,—having sucked (his) blood, as much as it wanted for itself, after its stomach was full, was happily making its dwelling on one side in that mattress. While (things) were thus, one day a bug, having come to near that louse, having made friendship with it, as it begged for itself also to live in that mattress, it consented to that word. Therefore that bug also having stayed on one side in that mattress,—the king having come that night, having lain down, before (he) went to sleep, having gently bit his body, began to drink (his) blood. He was then awake, so having risen quickly, having caused a light to be brought, before he looked, that bug having entered some where or other into the crevices of the cot which was under the mattress, went having became invisible (i. e. disappeared.). Afterwards, during the time that the king, having lifted up the light, was searching all the mattress, that louse not having run off to the other side,—having stuck to the mattress, until he, having searched on the four sides, looked,—at length began to run away, directly he brought the light near it. Therefore having seized, he killed it. The bug having bitten the king,—having by its carefulness entered into a crevice, before (he) brought the light,—having escaped,—was safe. Afterwards, when the king, having lain down again, had gone fast asleep,—having bitten his body,—drinking his blood, it was living happily in that mattress, just in the way in which the louse was formerly living. Therefore those to whom there is care beforehand will be happy.

FREE TRANSLATION. Once upon a time a louse having got into a mattress, upon which a king was accustomed to lie, lay concealed in one side of it, without any one knowing it. It waited until the king had come at night, and lain down, and gone to sleep ; and after he had gone to sleep, it bit him gently, and sucked as much blood as it wanted, and after its stomach was full, it remained comfortably in one side of the mattress. When matters stood thus, one day a bug came to the louse, and striking up a friendship with it, requested that it also might live in the mattress, to which the louse consented. Thus the bug also remained in one side of the mattress. When the king came, and lay down, the bug bit him gently, and began to drink his blood, before he had gone to sleep. The king was then awake, and so he rose up directly, and got a light; but before he could look, the bug had entered one of the chinks in the cot, which was under the mattress, and disappeared. During all the time that the king was holding up the light, and searching all the mattress, the louse did not run off, but stuck to the mattress, until the king, after searching on all four sides, looked (where it was); and then, directly he brought the light near it, it began to run away. The king therefore seized it, and killed it. The bug after biting the king, took care to get into a chink of the cot, before he brought the light; and so it escaped, and was safe. When the king had lain down again and gone fast asleep, it bit him, and thus drinking his blood, lived happily in the cot, as the louse formerly had lived. Thus those will prosper who exercise forethought.

Exercise XLIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In a hamlet there was a Sudra. He was rearing a monkey and a goat. As (things) were thus, when there came to him a business, on account of which it was necessary to go to another village, having tied up for himself a bundle of rice and curds, he also took with him the goat and the monkey. Afterwards, as there was a tank in the way, having stayed there, having tied up the goat and the monkey to a tree on the bank of the tank, having put the bundle of rice and curds near them, having himself descended into the water, having rubbed his teeth, by the time that he came again to the bank, the monkey having eaten up all the rice and curds, having smeared on the mouth of the goat the curds which had stuck to its paws, was itself sitting at a distance, like one that did not know any thing. By the time that the Sudra having come, looked, there was not one grain even of the rice, which he had gone and left on the bank. On the mouth of the goat only there was sticking (some) curds. Therefore although that goat had not done any fault, he not having considered, having conceived great wrath, beat it well. Therefore foolish masters do not consider justice and injustice.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain village there was a Sudra, who was rearing a monkey and a goat. When matters stood thus, some business arose, which obliged him to go to another village; and so he tied up some rice and curds in a bundle, and took with him the goat and the monkey. After some time, he stopped at a pool which was on the road side, and after tying up the goat and the monkey to a tree on the bank of the pool, he put the bundle of rice and curds near them, and went down into the water, and cleaned his teeth. By the time that he returned to the bank, the monkey had eaten up all the rice and curds, and smeared on the mouth of the goat the curds which had stuck to its paws, and was sitting down a long way off, as if it knew nothing about it. When the Sudra returned, and looked (at the bundle), there was not even one grain of the rice, which he had left on the bank, but on the mouth of the goat only some curds were sticking. (Here-upon) he did not stop to consider, but was very angry, and gave the goat a good thrashing, though it had not committed any fault. Thus foolish masters do not consider the justice or injustice of their actions.

Exercise XLIV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A Brahmin having married a virgin in childhood, by there not being a family to him for a long time, married another virgin. There not having been (any) children to that wife also until many days, at length a son was born. The husband and wife having both reared him with much fondness, although he did anything, having agreed to it all, when anyone was angry with him, they used to abuse them. In proportion as they acted thus, he having presumed still more, began to do bad works not only in the house, but outside also. Then all the village people not having been able to bear the wickedness which he was doing, having come to his parents, as (they) spoke, then too they not having said anything to their son, began to abuse the village people even. Afterwards upon that boy acting in the same way another day, the village people having seized him, when (they) beat (him) well, the parents having come, having seen the fact that they had beaten him, not having been able to do anything, grieved very much. Therefore when children have done bad works, parents having watched, must immediately check (them).

FREE TRANSLATION. A Brahmin married a girl in childhood, and as he had no family by her for a long time, he married a second wife. She also had no children for a long time, but at length a son was born. Both husband and wife petted him very much. Whatever he did, they consented to it; and when anyone was angry with him, they even used to abuse them. The more they acted in this way, the more presumptuous he was, and began to play his pranks not only at home, but out of doors. Then the village people being no longer able to bear his evil ways, came to his parents, and complained to them; but they did not rebuke their son, and even began to abuse the village people. Soon afterwards, when the boy on another occasion acted in the same way, the village people took him, and gave him a sound thrashing. When the parents came, and saw that they had beaten him, they were filled with grief, but were not able to say a single word. Hence when children have done wrong, their parents should be on the look out, and check them immediately.

Exercise XLV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In the Anga country a Brahmin had two wives. The elder one only of them had one son. Owing to the younger one having no family at all, she too having regarded this child as her son, was rearing him. In this way for seven months those two (women) by turns having put this child on the lap, were rearing him, without ever putting him down. At this time that Brahmin having placed his wives behind him, started from his house, to go on a pilgrimage to Rámâseveram. After having journeyed for a few days, he died on the way. Then both his wives having carried that boy, by the time that they went a little way, there appeared an Agraharam. On account of their village being a great distance from there (Lit. To there), not having been able to carry that child such a distance, they were living in that Agra-haram for many days. As things were thus, by reason of a quarrel having arisen after a few days between these two one with another, when the real mother (Lit. The mother who bare him.) called, the younger (wife), having made that he should not go, having taken (him) with her, when (she) was going away, the elder (wife) having gone to the village Munsiff, made a complaint about this matter. Then he having called them both to make an enquiry, as (he) asked, by its appearing by the words of the elder one, that the elder one was the real mother, and by the words of the younger one, that the younger one was the real mother, any certainty (in the matter) was not known. At that time the village Munsiff, to find out the truth of it, having considered the matter very deeply, at length having decided that they, having split the son, having made each a half, should give each a piece (of it) as he told (his decision) to them, the younger one, having shut her mouth, was silent. The elder one bringing a pot-full of water to her eyes, wept. In reference to this splitting and giving the child, the younger (wife), without grieving as the elder one grieved, consented to it. Therefore the Munsiff having perceived the truth, having handed over that boy to the elder (wife), having punished the younger one, sent them away. Therefore in proportion as (a man) has considered well, the truth will come out.

FREE TRANSLATION. A Brahmin in the Anga country had two wives. The elder one only had a son. As the younger one had no family at all, she nursed the child, regarding it as her own son. In this way for seven months the two women took the child in their laps by turn, and nursed him, without ever putting him down on the ground. About this time the Brahmin taking his wives with him, started from home, to go on a pilgrimage to Rāmāseveram. After having travelled for a few days, the Brahmin died on the road. Then his two wives carried the boy, and after they had gone a little way, they came in sight of an Agra-haram. As their village was a great distance off, and as they were unable to carry the child such a distance, they stayed for several days in the Agra-haram. When matters stood thus, after a few days a quarrel arose between the women, and so when the real mother called the child, the younger wife prevented his going, and (soon after) went off, taking him with her. Thereupon the elder wife went to the village Munsiff, and made a complaint about it. He at once called them both, in order to make an enquiry (into the matter); but as he questioned (them), he could not arrive at any sure conclusion, for from what the elder wife said, it appeared as if she were the real mother, and from what the younger wife said, it appeared as if she were the real mother. Then the Munsiff after much deep thought to find out the truth of the matter, decided that they should chop the son in half, and give one piece to each of the women. When he informed them of this decision, the younger wife said nothing, and remained silent. The eyes of the elder wife streamed down with tears. The younger wife did not grieve as the elder one did about chopping the son, and giving (the pieces), but consented to it. The Munsiff therefore perceiving the true state of the case, delivered over the child to the elder wife, and after punishing the younger one, sent them away. Thus in proportion as we investigate, the truth will come out.

Exercise XLVI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A Sudra had a she-buffalo. It always used to give a measure of milk. He having sold that milk for two pence, was making his living by it. When (things) were thus, one day he having made reflection,—“ If I sell the “milk which this buffalo gives, two pence only, you know, are “being obtained daily. By this I shall not become a rich man. “Therefore if I, having cut its udder, having taken all the milk “which is within, sell at one time, much wealth will come to me”—“thus having reflected, he cut that buffalo’s udder. Then, upon his looking inside, by reason of nothing else having appeared, except blood and flesh, he grieved greatly at the work which he had done. Therefore much loss will come to those who are not satisfied.

FREE TRANSLATION. A certain Sudra had a buffalo, which always used to give a measure of milk. He used to sell the milk for two pence, and thus gained his livelihood. When things were thus, one day he considered the matter, and made the following reflection,—“ If I sell the milk which this buffalo gives, I daily get two pence only, you know. In this way I shall never become a rich man. If I cut open its udder, and take and sell at one time all the milk within it, I shall get a great deal of money. So he cut open the buffalo’s udder. But when he looked inside, and saw nothing else but blood and flesh, he was sadly grieved at what he had done. Thus those who are not satisfied (with their present lot) will suffer much loss.

Exercise XLVII.

- R. Who is that, knocking at the door?
- Br. I am Bramhayya.
- R. You (is it)? I thought it was somebody else. (Lit. Somebody other.) Wait! I am coming. Come in, please. Sit down.
- What have you come about? (Lit. Upon what business.)
- Br. Nothing particular. I have (only) come to see you. (Lit. There is not anything. I have only come for your visit.)

- R. When I sent a message (for you) the day before yesterday, I suppose you were not at home.
- Br. It was so, Sir. If I had been at home, should I not have come?
- R. Yes. If you had been at home, you would certainly have come. There is no doubt about that. I merely asked (the question.) Where had you gone?
- Br. I had gone to another village.
- R. What about?
- Br. I went, because I wanted some rice for our son's wedding. (Lit. Some rice having been wanted.)
- R. When are you going to celebrate the wedding?
- Br. We must celebrate it in the month Jeyshta.
- R. Has Rungayya given (you) the rupees, which he ought to give you?
- Br. Why of course he has not yet given (them.) If he had (given,) should I not have paid off my debt to you. (Lit. your debt.)
- R. What conclusion have you come to about the matter? (Lit. What have you considered?)
- Br. I have not come to any conclusion. (Lit. To me anything was not thought.) If you come once, perhaps he would be afraid, and give (them to me); but otherwise, I do not see any way in which he will give them. (Lit. A way by which he will give them, does not appear.)
- R. If he gives them to you in that way, will you pay off your debt to me? (Lit. My debt.)
- Br. What doubt is there about that? Directly he has given them, you take them.
- R. Look here! If you do not give them (to me), when you want (it) again, a loan will not be forth-coming.
- Br. Let it be so, Sir. (Lit. Allow it to become so.)
- R. If you wait a few days, and (then) come, we will both go to his house. (Para. 710).
- Br. Very good, Sir. When shall we go to Mr. Juggarazu's house?
- R. How can we go now? When he came here, you did not come. Do you now come, and bother me (to go)?
- Br. When did he come? When did I not come?
- R. He came the day before yesterday, (and) then you did not come.
- Br. The day before yesterday I had gone away to another village. If I had been in the village, should I not have come?
- R. Yes. That is true. If you had been at home, you would certainly have come. If you had come the day before yesterday, I too would have made a request (on your behalf).

- Br. Will he come to day ?
- R. I do not know. If he does come, he does. If he does not, he does not ! (Lit. Any thing whatever ! If (he) comes, he may come ; otherwise, no.)
- Br. If he does not come to day, when else will there be an opportunity for seeing him ?
- R. When it is convenient to us, then we will go. (But) if in the mean time he comes here, we shall see him here.
- Br. I will now take leave, Sir.
- R. What hurry is there ? Stay a little longer, and then you may go. Stop please. What are you going to do, when you get home ?
- Br. Nothing particular. My son-in-law has come ; (and) he is alone. If he had not come, I would have stayed in accordance with your wishes.
- R. Must you really go ? (i. e. of necessity.)
- Br. Yes, Sir. He is alone.
- R. After having talked to him for a little time, will you come (here) again ?
- Br. If it is convenient to come to-day, I will (come). If not, I will come to-morrow.
- R. Look ! You must come to-morrow at any rate without fail.
- Br. I will certainly come.
- R. Should you perhaps forget and fail to come, just see, if I (ever) speak to you again !
- Br. Very good, Sir.
- R. When you come, bring your son-in-law also with you. Would he come ? (Lit. Come, having called your son-in-law too.)
- Br. I do not know. If he will come, I will bring him.
- R. No, no. You must some how or other bring him.
- Br. Why are you so anxious about him ? (Lit. Such a necessity with him (is) what ?)
- R. There is nothing particular. But I must see him.
- Br. Well ! He is a well read man, and therefore one that ought to be seen.
- R. With whom did he read ?
- Br. He read with Gánugapáti Venkatashástrulu.
- R. Is he an able man ? (i. e. G. Venkatashástrulu.)
- Br. Dear me ! He is a learned man in the four Shasters. Do not you know him ?
- R. I do know him, but not very well. If we invite (him), will he come to our house ?
- Br. If he has nothing else to do, he will come ? What doubt is there of that ?

- R. Will you then invite him to come with you ? (Lit. Will you come, having called him ?)
- Br. Ought not you to come too, Sir ? If you came and invited him, he would come without fail.
- R. There is no reason why I should not come ; but to-day an important person will come here, and on account of that, I must stay at home. If you invite him, will he not come ?
- Br. He would come ; but my inviting him will not be so polite. If it were to my own house, it would not matter.
- R. Do not do it then to-day. To-morrow we will both go together, and invite him. (Lit. Having invited, come.)
- Br. Let it be so then. Please give me leave. I will go (now), and return again to-morrow.
- R. Very well, go ; but you must come again. (Lit. Having gone ; come.)

Exercise XLVIII.

- E. Rámasáwmy ! you must go before me to Bezwara.
- S. Very well, Sir. I will go, whenever you wish, Sir.
- E. Very good. Start off on Thursday at mid-day.
- S. When will you start, Sir ?
- E. I shall start on Monday, and shall arrive there on Tuesday. By the time therefore that we get down from the boat, you must have ready there eight bearers, and two palanquins, and four coolies with yokes.
- S. Very well, Sir.
- E. Directly you have gone to Bezwara, you must procure eight bearers, and one torch bearer, for (your) Mistress to go to Guntoor by palanquin.
- S. Do you not require bearers for yourself ?
- E. I shall go on horseback, and so I shall not want bearers.
- S. If I make enquiries all by myself in the village (i. e. Bezwara), it will be difficult to get bearers. If you give me a note to the Tahsildar there, it would be a good thing.
- E. Very good. I will (so give), but you too must go, and speak to him.
- S. Very well, Sir.
- E. As soon as you get down from the boat on Tuesday, you must have (every thing) cooked and ready, so that all the servants may take their food without delay. That very day you must all cross the Kistna (river), and go in the evening to Mungalagiri.
- S. Very well, Sir. I will get every thing ready, just as you say. (Lit. Exactly according to that, having made all things ready, I will keep them, Sir.)
- E. All right ; but you must order two bandies for our luggage to go to Guntoor.

- S. There is no necessity to order them in Bezwara, Sir ?
 E. Why ? Will it be difficult to cross the Kistna ?
 S. It is true that there is a ferry boat to carry the bandies across, but putting them on and getting them off is a great deal of trouble. (Lit. There is a ferry boat indeed.)
 E. What other contrivance is there for it ?
 S. If we cross the Kistna, and (then) enquire for bandies, they can be easily obtained.
 E. All the villages there are hamlets. Where can bandies come from ? (Lit. All those there are hamlets. Bandies are those of what place ?)
 S. The return bandies will be there, which have come from Guntur. We may enquire for them.
 E. All right. They are return bandies, and so they will be got for less hire too.
 S. What you say is, (very) true, Sir. (Lit. That word is truth.)
 E. We shall come to Mangalagiri at eight o'clock at night on Wednesday.
 S. Very well, Sir. By the time that you come, must I have tea etcetera ready ?
 E. Why do you ask like that, just as if you were a new servant ? Do you not know ? Shall we come, and remain (just as we are,) fasting ?
 S. Very well, Sir. I understand.
 E. At dawn on Thursday, as soon as our breakfast is finished, you and Ayah may go with the bandy to Guntur. We shall start about eight or nine o'clock and come ; so take care that every thing is ready in our lodging, by the time that we come.

Exercise. XLIX.

- R. Hallo, Krishnayya-gáru ! It is many a day, since I saw you. Where have you been for such a long time ? I have not seen you anywhere. (Lit. You have not been appearing.)
 Kr. Oh ! Don't you know ? I have been away to get a livelihood. (Lit. For the nourishment of my stomach.)
 R. Where are you coming from now ? (Lit. Your coming is from where ?)
 Kr. From our own village.
 R. Are all your people well ?
 Kr. By your favour they are all well.
 R. Are Sashayya-gáru and all the rest well ?
 Kr. Now they have become very rich people. Did not you know it ?
 R. Is it so ? It is wonderful how such poor people have become rich ! (Lit. How to such poor people wealth came.)
 What wonder is it ? This year all their lands yielded well. Through this they got a lot of money.

- R. Do you know how (the land) yielded in our village ?
 Kr. I do not know how it yielded.
 R. Do you know at all, whether our son is in the village, or not ?
 Kr. I do not think he is. (Lit. It is that he is not.)
 R. Did you not hear, where he had gone ?
 Kr. No. (Lit. I did not hear.)
 R. Where are you going now ? (Lit. Where go you now ?)
 Kr. I am going to our daughter's village.
 R. Will you find out for me, when Jaggarázu-gáru's daughter's marriage will take place there ? (Lit. When they will make.)
 Kr. Yes, with pleasure. (Lit. Ah ! what (hinderance is there) to that ? Having found out, I will come.
 R. Have you found out who those people are, who have come along with you ?
 Kr. I do not know who they are, but they are very nice people.
 R. When shall you come back again ? Will it be in a month's time ? (Lit. Will a month suit ?)
 Kr. Why a month, Sir ? I shall come in five or six days.
 R. When you come, will you come to our village ?
 Kr. If I come this way, I will not fail to come to your village.
 R. Do come this way.
 Kr. Certainly. This road is the best one for me ; but I do not know if my daughter likes it, or not.
 R. I do not know how that may be ; but if you do come at all, do not go away without coming to our village.
 Kr. Why do you speak so ? If I come this way, should I go away without coming (to see you) ? I shall certainly come. (Lit. What is that ? You speak so, do you ?)
 R. Very good. Go, and (then) return here. Only do not forget what I have said.

Exercise L.

- E. I have heard, that in this country goldsmiths must not ride in palanquins. Why (is this) ? (Lit. Must not mount palanquins, thus I have heard.)
 H. From ancient times there has been no custom according to which they may ride (in them). For some reason or other, thus it has come to pass.
 E. Is it only the palanquin, or is there anything else ?
 H. They must not do certain other things. Shall I tell you what they severally are ?
 E. Tell me clearly, what they are. I think that I have never yet heard them.
 H. They must not whitewash the outside walls of their houses, on festive occasions, as marriage, etc, or at ordinary times.
 E. Tell me what else they must not do.

- H. They must not tie garlands and flowers to the outside doorway of their houses. (Lit. Of house.)
- E. I think that some one has already told me this. If there is any thing more, tell me.
- H. At a wedding they may have a band played in the house; but they must not have it played outside. (Lit. They may play a band.)
- E. If they do these things, will any one be the loser? (Lit. Will any one's money go?)
- H. No one will be the loser. But for some reason or other from ancient times such has been the custom. (Lit. So it has been going on.)
- E. Do you think that it was decreed by any one, that they might do one thing, and might not do another? (Lit. They may do in this way, and they may not do (in that), thus it was determined by some-one,—thus it is thought to you?)
- H. I do not think that it was decreed by any one. I think it is only custom.

Exercise LI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In an Agraháram there was a Brahmin. He had one son. One day having put his son behind (him), as he was going to a village, that boy cried out in jest thus—"O father, a tiger has come." Then as the father having turned round, looked, there was not a tiger, or any thing of the kind. Afterwards, when they had gone a little distance more, a tiger having come, seized that boy. Then too, just as he had cried out before, he cried out thus—"A tiger has come." Just as before, now too he is crying out in sport—thus having thought, the father did not turn round. Therefore no one will believe the words of liars.

FREE TRANSLATION. In a certain village there lived a Brahmin, who had one son. As he was one day going to village, taking his son with him, the boy cried out in sport—"O father, a tiger has come." When the father turned round and looked, there was no tiger, or anything of the kind. Afterwards, when they had gone a little further on, a tiger really came, and seized the boy. Hereupon he cried out, just as before—"A tiger has come." The father thinking that he was crying out in sport, as he had done before, did not turn round. Thus no one will believe what liars say.

Exercise LII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. One day two boys went to a garden. One of them having seen upon a tree some good pieces of fruit, went to cut them. Then the second one said—"Hallo! Be careful! If the gardener sees you, he will beat you." Nevertheless that boy not having listened to his words, having climbed the tree, having cut the fruit, came. In the meantime the gardener having come, having asked thus—"Why did you cut these pieces of fruit"—seized him. To that the boy having said—"I did not cut this fruit. He having cut them, gave them to my hands"—as he pointed out (to him) the friend who had given him good advice, the gardener having seized (him), beat him. Therefore we must not make the intercourse of wicked people.

FREE TRANSLATION. One day two boys went to a garden; and one of them seeing some fine fruit upon a tree, went to gather it. Then the other boy said—"Take care! If the gardener sees you, he will beat you." The boy nevertheless did not listen to what his friend said, but climbed the tree, and gathered the fruit. Thereupon the gardener came up, and asked him, why he had plucked the fruit (oblique narration), and laid hold of him. The boy replied—"I did not cut it. He cut it, and gave it into my hands" (a)—and at the same time he pointed out to the gardener his friend, who had given him the good advice. So the gardener laid hold of him, and beat him. Thus we should not associate with wicked people.

Note. (a) Here we might also use the oblique narration, e. g. The boy replied, that he had not gathered it himself, but that his friend had gathered it, and had given it into his hands.

Exercise LIII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. One day as a cat and a jackal having met in the same place, were talking, the jackal having looked at the cat, asked thus—"O cat! If any danger approaches you, how many devices have you learnt to escape it?" When the cat replied to that thus—"I know one device. By that one device, I am escaping all dangers which come—" the jackal having laughed, ridiculed it thus—"Is that which is known to you this only? You do not know all the devices that I know. Is it not so?" When things were thus, from somewhere or other hunting dogs came that way. The cat having seen those dogs, climbed a tree which was there. The jackal not being able to climb a tree, other devices not being known (to it), having been entrapped amongst those dogs, died. Therefore he who has learnt even one science well will be happy.

FREE TRANSLATION. One day a cat and a jackal met each other, and as they were conversing, the jackal looking at the cat, asked it the following question. "O cat! if any danger approaches you, how many devices have you learnt, to escape it?" The cat replied—"I know one device, and by that one device I escape every danger that arises." (a). At this the jackal laughed, and said in ridicule—"Is this all you know? You do not know all the devices, that I know. Do you?" At that moment some hounds from somewhere or other came alone the road. The cat seeing them, climbed up a tree, that was on the spot. The jackal, being unable to climb a tree, and not knowing any other device, got entrapped amongst the dogs, and was killed. Hence the man who has learnt even one science thoroughly, will be prosperous.

Note. (a) Here the oblique narration might also be used. e. g. The cat replied, that it knew one device, and by that one device escaped every danger.

Exercise LIV.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A washerman had a donkey. It having constantly carried burdens, having become weak, there not being strength (to it) even to get up, had fallen down. Then that washerman having spread a tiger's skin upon it, drove it into a field. All those who were there having seen it, having thought—"That is a tiger"—having feared, ran away. After some time more, the man who watched that field having said (to himself) thus—"By its walk this does not appear as a tiger. Nevertheless, let us see"—having spread over himself a donkey's skin, came there. This donkey having seen him, having thought—"("It is) another donkey"—ran to him braying. That watchman by its braying having known thus—"("It is) a donkey"—killed it. Therefore fools will go to ruin themselves.

FREE TRANSLATION. A certain washerman had a donkey, which having become very weak by constantly carrying burdens, fell down, and was unable to get up again. The washerman therefore covered it with a tiger skin, and drove it into a field. When all the people there saw it, they thought that it was a tiger, and ran away in a great fright. After a little time, the man who was keeping watch over the field, said to himself—From its walk it does not appear to be a tiger, at any rate let us see (whether it is or not). So he covered himself with a donkey's skin, and went to the place. When the donkey saw him, it thought that he was another donkey, and trotted up to him, braying. The watchman knowing from its braying, that it was a donkey, (immediately) killed it. Thus fools bring ruin upon themselves.

Exercise LV.

Su. Did you see Mr. Rámayya yesterday ?

Br. Yes. I did (see).

Su. Did he say anything to you ?

Br. He said that he had written a letter to your uncle. (Lit. "I have written a letter in your uncle's name"—he said.)

Su. Did he say, by whom he had sent it ?

Br. He said, that he had sent it by a cooly man. (Lit. "I sent it by a cooly"—he said.)

Su. Did he say that the cooly had brought back an answer ? (Lit. "The cooly brought back an answer"—thus did he say ?)

Br. No. (Lit. He did not say.)

Su. If you go to him this evening, will you tell him, that I will come to his house to-morrow at ten o'clock?

Br. I will. When I saw him yesterday, he asked me whether you were at home. (Lit. "Are you in the village?"—thus he asked.)

Su. When he asked, what did you say?

Br. I said that you were at home.

Su. Did you say anything else?

Br. I said that I had seen you lately, and that in a few days you would go to Masulipatam. (Lit. "I saw you lately, and you will go to Masulipatam in a few days"—thus I said.)

Su. Did he say anything about the books, which he had lent me?

Br. He only said, that you had borrowed five books. (Lit. "You having asked five books, took them"—thus he said.)

Su. Was that all?

Br. Yes, that was all.

Exercise LVI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. A thief became king to a town. Then a poet having come to him, having said some verses upon him, asked thus—"Give to self some alms." Immediately he having looked at the servants who were near him, ordered thus—"Having robbed all the cloths which are upon that poet, beat him away." They in accordance with that, having stripped off all his clothes, beat him away. Therefore, although great authority has come to mean persons, they will not give up their mean spirit.

FREE TRANSLATION. A thief became king of a certain town. Thereupon a poet came to him, and recited some verses in his honour, and asked (him) to give him some alms. The king looking at the servants which were about him, immediately ordered them to rob all the poet's clothes, and to drive him away. Accordingly they stripped off all his clothes, and drove him away. Thus although mean persons rise to positions of great authority, they will not give up their meanness.

Exercise LVII.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In the Anga country there was a king. An Astrologer constantly used to be coming to him. One day that king having looked at that Astrologer, asked thus—"How many years shall I still live. Tell (me)." When he replied thus—"You will not still live more than two years,"—the king having heard this word, was very full grief. Afterwards the Prime-minister, who was near, having looked at that Astrologer, asked thus—"The king will not still live more than two years, thus you have said; have you not? How many years shall you (yourself) live? Tell (me)." He replied thus—"I shall yet live twenty years." Then the Prime-minister having drawn his sword, having cut off his head with one stroke, having looked at the king, encouraged him thus—"Sir, why having believed his words, are you fearing? How can one who does not know his own death, tell the death of others? Therefore do not fear." The king having commended his wisdom very much, gave him many presents. Therefore one must not believe the words of Astrologors.

FREE TRANSLATION. There was in the Anga country a certain king, upon whom a certain Astrologer used to be in constant attendance. One day the king looking at the Astrologer, asked him to tell him, how many more years he would yet live. The Astrologer replied, that he would not live more than two years. Upon hearing this, the king was full of grief. Then the Prime-minister, who was standing near, said to the Astrologer—"You have said that the king will not live more than two years; have you not? Now tell me how many years you are going to live yourself?" The Astrologer replied, that he would live twenty years more. Then the Prime-minister drew his sword, and cut off his head with one stroke, and looking at the king, encouraged him in the following words—"Sir, why should you be afraid at hearing what this Astrologer says. Do not be afraid. How can one who does not know when he will die himself, tell when others will die." Thereupon the king commended his wisdom very much, and made him many presents. Hence we must not believe what Astrologers say.

Exercise LVIII.

- M. Rámasáwmy! Go to Mr. Smith's house, and tell him that I am unwell, (and so) cannot come (to him) this evening; (but that) I will come to-morrow morning.
- S. Very good, Sir. If Mr. Smith is not at home, may I wait till he comes, or must I come back again at once?
- M. If (they) say that he is in the place, wait till he comes, and tell him; and then come back (to me). If he is not, come back at once.
- S. Very good, Sir. Shall I say that you will come to-morrow morning?
- M. I have already told you to say so, have I not? Why are you asking again? (Lit. I have already said thus—"Tell him so.")
- S. Very good, Sir. If he asks at what hour you will come, what shall I say? (Lit. What is that which I shall say?)
- M. Say that I shall come about six o'clock.
- S. Very good, Sir. I will go at once. (Lit. Having gone, I will come).

Sm. Who are you ?

S. I am Mr. Martin's servant.

Sm. Why have you come ?

S. Master told (me) to tell you, that he is unwell to-day, and is not able to come to your house this evening.

Sm. Very well. Tell him that, if he will send word when he can come, I will stay at home.

S. Very good, Sir. He told (me) to tell you, that he would come about 6 o'clock to-morrow morning. (Lit. He said—say thus—I will come. etc.)

Sm. Very well. I shall be very glad to see him. Tell him to come then.

S. Very good, Sir.

Sm. Tell him that I must go to Masulipatam to-morrow at ten o'clock, (and so) if he comes late, I shall not be at home.

S. Very good, Sir. I will take leave, Sir.

M. Did you see Mr. Smith ?

S. Yes, Sir.

M. Did you give him the message, which I told you to give him ?
 (Lit. Did you tell him the message, which I said—tell ?)

S. Yes, Sir.

M. What did he say ?

S. He told me to tell you, that, if you come at six o'clock to-morrow, he will be at home. (Lit. He said—say thus—I shall be, etc.)

M. Very good. Did he say anything else ?

S. He told me to tell you, that he would go to Masulipatam to-morrow. (Lit. We ourselves (honorific plural) shall go to Bunder to-morrow—thus tell—he said.)

M. To Masulipatam ! Did he not say at what hour he would go ?

S. He did, Sir. He said that he would start at ten o'clock.
 (Lit. I shall start at ten o'clock,—he said.)

M. Indeed ! Very good. Did you tell him that I was sick ?

S. I did, Sir.

M. Very well. You may go. (Lit. Go.)

Exercise LIX.

B. Venkayya-gáru ! I heard that you have not been at home lately. Where have you been ? (Lit. In the village.)

V. I have been to stay with my mother-in-law. (Lit. I have been to my mother-in-law's house.)

B. What was the matter ?

V. They said that my brother-in-law was sick. So I thought I would go to see him. (Lit. They said that it was sickly to my brother-in-law in the body. I went, saying (to myself)—“ Having seen him, let us come.”)

- B. Indeed ! The day before yesterday, (while) going to the thrashing floor, I went to your house, and called you. Your son then told me that you were not at home, but had gone somewhere or other. But he did not tell me, that you had gone to your mother-in-law's house.
- V. He did not know, that I had gone. (Lit. The fact that I had gone, was not known to him.)
- B. When did you come back from there ?
- V. I came last night. As soon as I had come, they said that you had come, and called me ; but it was not convenient (to me) to come then. I heard that you said, that I must go to Kámarázu-gáru's (house). Why did you say, that I must go ? (Lit. I heard, that you told me—Go to Kámarázu's house.)
- B. Nothing particular. Some one or other said, that he said, that you must come.
- V. Do you know at all why (he said so)?
- B. He understood that the Kernans of their village had written a letter to you, and that the letter had reached you. I think, that he called you on account of this.
- V. No letter came to me from their village. Who said that it had come ?
- B. Yes. I too heard that (it) had not come ; but I do not know who told him that (it) had come.
- V. Was it on account of this, that you sent for me ? (Lit. Why (was) the fact that you called ? (Was it) for this ?)
- B. Yes.
- V. Will you allow me to go now ? I will come again. (Lit. Will you give me leave ? Having gone, I will come.)
- B. Where are you going ? To his house ?
- V. Yes.
- B. Well, you must come again soon. (Lit. Having gone, come.)

Exercise LX.

- E. Munshi ! You did not come yesterday. Why (was this) ? I sent a message also for you to come.
- M. Yesterday thinking that perhaps you would send a message, I waited in the house, without going (out) anywhere. Nobody came. Whom did you send ?
- E. I sent Rámasáwmy. Did he not come to you ? (Lit. To there.)
- M. If he came, would he not have seen me ? (Lit. If he came, will he come without seeing me ?)
- E. Dear me ! I will call, and ask him. Rámasáwmy ! Come here.
- R. I am come, Sir.
- E. Yesterday I told you to go to the Munshi's house, did I not ? Did you go ?

- R. As it was late, I did not go, Sir. (Lit. Saying the sun has mounted (high), I did not go.)
 E. Why did you not tell me, that you had not gone?
 R. I was afraid, that you would be angry.
 E. As you are an old man, I will forgive (you) this time ; but if you do so another time, I will discharge you. (Lit. I will take you away from out of your work.)
 R. I will never do so again, Sir.
 E. You are a foolish man. Why have you acted in this way now only? It is difficult (for a man), even when he has done what has been ordered, to gain with his master the reputation of being a good servant. But how long does it take, to gain the reputation of being a bad servant? Henceforth at any rate, be careful.
 R. I am very sorry, Sir. Henceforth I will never act in this manner. (Lit. Sense has come.)
 E. Very well. Go.

- E. Is Rághavácháryulu-gáru, at home? (Lit. In the village.)
 M. Yes. He is, Sir. (Lit. He is in the village, Sir.) Lately too he has several times made an attempt to come and see you; but for some reason or other, he has not come. (Lit. He has made an attempt saying,—I must come to you.)
 E. I do not know, why he has not come. I too have been frequently expecting him to come; but up till now he has not come. (Lit. Saying he will come, I have been expecting.)
 M. Another person too very much desires to visit you. He has mentioned (it) to me several times. Do you know him?
 E. I do not (know). Who is he?
 M. Krishnamácháryulu-gáru, a Vishnavite.
 E. What has he studied?
 M. Amongst us there are four Shasters, namely, logic, grammar, theological criticism, and Vedic theology. He has thoroughly studied these four Shasters.
 E. What else has he studied?
 M. It is impossible to say he knows one thing, and does not know another. He knows everything.
 E. Really! By all means bring him. I should like to see him. (Lit. Let us see.)

Exercise LXI.

LITERAL TRANSLATION. In the town named Kanchi there was a learned man named Venkatacháryulu. He, telling learning to many children, was making his livelihood by it. One day a boy having come to him—“Sir, there is very much to me a desire which says, I must learn science, therefore you must teach (me)"—thus (he) prayed. He having said (to himself)—“ Let us see that boy's intelligence”—asked (him) thus—“ Where is God.” Afterwards, that boy said thus—“ If you will first mention a place in which God is not, afterwards I will answer (your question.)” That learned man having heard the word of this boy, thinking that he was very intelligent, taught (to) him science well, as he desired. Therefore from youth right things will occur to the intelligent.

FREE TRANSLATION. In the town of Conjeveram there lived a learned man named Venkatacháryulu, who gained his livelihood by teaching several children. One day a boy came to him, and begged him to teach him, as he had a very great desire to acquire knowledge. The learned man, in order to test the boy's intelligence, asked him—“Where is God.” The boy replied—“ If you will first mention a place in which God is not, I will answer your question.” The learned man hearing the boy's reply, thought that he was very intelligent, and educated him as he had desired. Thus from earliest youth the intelligent will have correct notions.

Exercise LXII.

- E. I have heard, that in this country all may not use a pair of torches. (Is it) true ?
- H. It is true. (But) some only may use them.
- E. Tell me who may use (them), and who may not (use.)
- H. Zemindars and our Gurus may use them.
- E. Is it (written) in your Shasters, that such and such people may use (them), and such and such people may not (use.) ?
- H. Such matters are the customs of various countries, but they are not things which are in accordance with the Shasters.
- E. But is this matter of using, or of not using two torches—at weddings, or on ordinary occasions ?
- H. At weddings it is not two, Sir. Even if there be twelve it is all right; a man may use them, I am speaking about ordinary occasions.
- E. At the present time too is it going on in this manner ?
- H. Nobody does use them; but this is the free British rule, and so those who wish, can use (them), if they have money (for such things).

Exercise LXIII.

LITERAL TEANSLATION. In the village named Dhárapuram there was a Brahmin. One day he having said (to himself), I must come having cut for myself flowers and fruits, as (he) went to the jungle, a tiger came there. He having seen that tiger, having feared, as (he) ran, the tiger having pursued him, seized (him). Then what that Brahmin said to the tiger was as follows—"If you having kept favour upon me, not having killed me until four days, let (me) go, I, having gone to (my) house, having arranged all my businesses, having seen all my relations, having taken leave of them, will come"—as (he thus) said, the tiger asked thus—"If you do not come, what shall I do?" "I will truly come"—thus he swore. Therefore that tiger let him go, having said to him—"Very well. Having gone, come." Afterwards, that Brahmin having become one swallowed up with grief, having gone to his house, having arranged all his businesses, at the time at which he said to the tiger thus—"I will come"—he went to it. That tiger having approved of his truthfulness, not having injured him, said thus—"Go home." Therefore all honour those who speak the truth.

FREE TRANSLATION. In the village of Dhárápuram there lived a Brahmin. One day as he went to the jungle to gather some flowers and fruit, a tiger met him. When he saw the tiger, he was very much afraid, and began to run away; but the tiger pursued him, and caught him. Thereupon the Brahmin addressed the tiger as follows—"If you will be merciful to me, and not kill me, but let me off for three days, I will go to my house, and arrange my affairs, and see my relations, and bid them farewell, and will then return to you." To this the tiger replied—"If you do not come, what shall I do?" The Brahmin swore that he would really return; and so the tiger said that he might go, and let him depart. Afterwards the Brahmin, overwhelmed with grief, went to his house, and arranged his affairs, and then went to the tiger at the time at which he said that he would go. The tiger so approved of his truthfulness, that it did not do him any injury, but told him to go home. Thus all honour those who speak the truth.

PART II.

AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE TELUGU
CONVERSATIONS, LETTERS, AND STORIES,
GIVEN IN CHAPTER XVIII OF THE GRAMMAR.

CONVERSATIONS.

(A.) A CONVERSATION WHICH TOOK PLACE BETWEEN AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN AND A HINDOO ABOUT RICE.

- E. How do they cultivate rice in this country ?
 H. After they have in the first place thoroughly ploughed the ground, they plough it with water on. Before that they sow seeds for sprouts in a sprout bed.
 E. After the sprouts have come up, what do they do ?
 H. They bring the sprouts, and transplant them into the bed which has been ploughed with water on it.
 E. What is the meaning of transplanting ?
 H. Bringing the sprouts, and planting them in the beds which have been ploughed with water on them. (383.)
 E. After they have sown them, is not water required for the sprouts ?
 H. Dear me ! If there were not water, how would it be ! The water in the beds must never be drawn off. (Lit. must be without (men) drawing it off.)
 E. If there is much water, will not the sprouts go rotten ?
 H. They will not, Sir. The more water rice-beds have, the better. (Lit. If there is ever-so-much water, so much it is good.)
 E. Is not water required for the other fields, (such as) gram, etcetera ? (846)
 H. Gram and the like belong to the cool wind crop, and so they do not in the least require water. Sir.
 E. What is the meaning of cool wind crop ?
 H. The crop which is produced by the cool winds.
 E. What are the names of those (grains) which belong to that crop ?
 H. Gram, Bengal gram, green gram, mungo, wheat, etcetera.
 E. Afterwards, what do they do to the rice ?
 H. After it has well ripened, they cut it, and put it into a rick.
 E. How do they cut it ? With scythes ?

- H. No. They cut it with sickles, Sir. When they have cut it (Lit. Having cut it), they put it all in one place into a rick.
- E. When they have put it into a rick, how many days do they keep it so ?
- H. After they have kept it about three or four months, they afterwards thrash it.
- E. I do not in the least understand the meaning of the word "thrash." Tell me what it is ?
- H. They throw down the rick, and tread out all the dry rice with cattle.
- E. After the cattle have trod it out, how will the rice be ?
- H. All the grain will be below, and the straw will come to the top. Afterwards they take away the straw.
- E. Afterwards what do they do ?
- H. Government persons come, (402), and cause kailu to be made, that is (618) they cause it to be measured.
- E. After they have caused it to be measured, do they keep the grain in the field ?
- H. No, Sir. They take it to their houses, and some pour it into store-rooms ; others bury it. The meaning (615.) of burying it is—pouring it into a pit, and pouring soil on the top.
- E. Why do they bury it ?
- H. They bury it for the rice to get old.
- E. For how many months do they keep it in the pits ?
- H. They keep it for about four or five months.
- E. By keeping it in that way, will not the grain go bad ?
- H. No, Sir. That only is old rice. It is useful also for invalids. (Lit. for diet.)
- E. Tell me how they make the grain into table rice ?
- H. They first put the grain in the sun, and keep it so for one day. On the ground there is a hole, namely a grain-hole ; and on the following day they pour the grain into it, and (then) three or four women pound it with pestals.
- E. After they have pounded it, will it be white ? (643.)
- H. No, Sir. After all the husk has peeled off, they call it chérice.
- E. Afterwards, how do they make white rice ?
- H. They bring the rice and pour it into wooden mortars, and after they have pounded it, it will be white.
- E. What do they call it ? (Ask its name.)
- H. Some call it pounded rice, and others call it white rice.
- E. If you pound rice, of course there will be some husk. What is its name ?
- H. They call it bran.
- E. What do they do with the bran ?

- H. They give it to fowls.
 E. Ought one not to give bran to milk-giving cattle ?
 H. If there is any, you may give it. If you give it, they will give much milk.

(B.) A CONVERSATION ABOUT A JOURNEY.

- E. Last month you took leave, you know, to go to another village. How far did you go ?
 H. I went to a village named Pittapoor, which is to the east (of this.)
 E. On what business did you go there ?
 H. To enquire about a girl for my second marriage.
 E. Has the girl any parents ?
 H. She has parents, and two elder brothers, and two elder sisters.
 E. Is the girl pretty, or not ?
 H. She is not very pretty, and she is not very ugly. She is ordinary looking.
 E. Will they take money, or will they give the girl ?
 H. If it had been old times, they would have given her away ; but at the present time they have no harvest, and so they are taking money.
 E. Is the taking of money a meritorious action, or a sin ?
 H. It is a sin, and not a meritorious action.
 E. Why do they take it, although they know it to be sin ?
 H. Not having power to perform the marriage (in any other way), they are obliged to take it.
 E. Whether there is power or not, is it good to commit sin ?
 H. No one will say that committing sin is good.
 E. It is said in your very shasters that as much guilt attaches itself to a man who sells his daughter, as to a butcher who kills a cow, and sells its flesh.
 H. Yes, Sir. I have already informed you that they are doing it, although they know (it to be sin).
 E. Let this matter pass now. When you were going, did you go by boat ?
 H. When I was going, I went by boat. But when I was returning, I came by (bullock) cart.
 E. (Starting) from Bezwara, what villages come in the way ?
 H. After Bezwara, Ellore. After that place, Dowlaishweram. After Dowlaishweram either Cocanada or Samulcotta ; you may go whichever way is (most) convenient. So far there are boats.
 E. Can we walk upon the Dowlaishweram anicut ? (An anicut is a very large dam, built of stone.)
 H. In this hot season you can walk, but in the rainy season, if the Godaverry (freshes) come down; it is impossible.

- E. Is the Bezwara anicut or the Dowlaishweram anicut the greatest ?
 H. There is no comparison. There is a vast difference between them.
 E. How many mouths has the Godavery, one only, or are there two or three ?
 H. The Godavery has three mouths, Sir.
 E. Are there crocodiles in the Godavery ?
 H. There are not usually any about Rajahmundry, but there are beyond.
 E. What ! Do they not frequent inhabited places ?
 H. Usually they do not frequent any other places but Madugulu.
 E. What is the meaning of a Madugu ?
 H. Madugu is the name of water which is still like a tank, without any stream.
 E. Is a crocodile a powerful animal ?
 H. When it is in the water, it can pull in even an elephant. If it comes upon the bank, it is good for nothing. Even a dog can kill it.
 E. If men go down into the water, will the crocodiles drag them in also ?
 H. Will they show favour to men alone ? whatever they can get, that (they drag in.)
 E. Up to this time have you ever seen them ?
 H. I have seen them several times.
 E. (Have you seen) a dead one or a live one ?
 H. I have seen both.
 E. How can they catch them ?
 H. I think they can catch them by putting nets.

(C.) A CONVERSATION ABOUT MAKING REPAIRS TO A HOUSE.

- H. Whose is this house ?
 E. A certain Sivite's. His name (is) Ramalingam.
 H. Have you bought it, or are you renting it ?
 E. Hitherto I have rented it, but now I have bought it.
 H. This is a very old house, you know. Shall you have it repaired ?
 E. After a little time I shall have it repaired. For how much do they sell a putty of lime ?
 H. Formerly they used to give it for five rupees, but now they will not give it for less than ten rupees.
 E. From where do they bring it ?
 H. From Pedapathnam.
 E. How far is Pedapathnam from here ?
 H. Twelve miles, Sir.
 E. How does the lime come from there ?
 H. If you speak to a bricklayer, he will get it.

- E. Do they bring slaked lime, or the shells? (N. B. In India the best lime, called chunum, is made from shells.)
- H. They bring the shells, and slake it here. Then they measure it, and deliver it.
- E. What must they do to it afterwards?
- H. They must pour sand into it, and mix it; and then pour in also treacle water, and then put it in heaps.
- E. How long must they keep it in that way?
- H. In proportion to the haste (with which the work is required to be done), some take it quickly. But the more it soaks, the better.
- E. How does it soak? Does it not get dry?
- H. To prevent it getting dry, they must keep pouring water on it. (Lit. So that it may be without getting dry.)
- E. Of course the mortar (in this state) will not be soft. How do they work with it?
- H. They do not work (with it), while it is in that state, Sir. They get women to pound it soft.
- E. With what (tools) do the bricklayers put the mortar on the walls?
- H. There are (tools) namely trowells. Have you seen them? With them (they work).
- E. Is it best, if I give all the work on contract, or if I get it done by daily wages?
- H. If you give it on contract, they will not do it well, Sir. It is best if you get it done by daily wages.
- E. If I get it done by daily wages, they will loiter, will they not? How about that?
- H. On that account you must keep a man near them, and keep hurrying them.
- E. If you hurry (them) only, will they do it quickly?
- H. If you keep hurrying them, it is a little better than keeping entirely quiet.
- E. Is it better to plaster, or to prick out the bricks with mortar?
- H. Pricking the bricks out with mortar soon falls to decay. If there is plaster, it will last for a long time.
- E. I suppose that if I plaster, much mortar will be required.
- H. Yes, Sir. There is a proverb amongst us, viz.—“In proportion to the flour (will be) the bread.” Have you (ever) heard it?
- E. I have not heard it until now. What is the meaning of it?
- H. The meaning is—The more flour you put, the more bread will be. And so the more mortar you use in the work, the stronger the work will be.

(D.) A CONVERSATION ABOUT A SCHOOL.

- H. When shall you give holidays to the school ?
 E. After the public examination has taken place.
 H. When shall you have the public examination ?
 E. It is not yet fixed, but it may take place next week. (Lit.
 There is not yet certainty.)
 H. How many days after breaking up, shall you reassemble the school? (Lit. Having given leave now, in how many days, etc.)
 E. After one month.
 H. After examining them, shall you give any prizes to the children? (Lit. Is there the fact that you will give prizes.)
 E. Yes. I shall.
 H. To whom, and on what principle do you give prizes ?
 E. I give them, having regard to the ability of the boys individually in their studies, but it is not possible to determine (the matter) beforehand.
 H. Is there any partiality in the matter, or do you regard all alike ? (Lit. Are all alike to you ?)
 E. I have the same feeling towards all the boys. There is no partiality. But each gets his due. (Lit. What is the luck to each, that they will obtain.)
 H. Shall you invite to the examination any men of position ?
 E. I shall have notes sent out to some suitable persons. If they wish to do so, they will come.
 H. Will those who come examine the children, or will they sit still ?
 E. A few suitable persons will examine (the boys), and all the rest will listen.
 H. How many times a year shall you hold an examination ?
 E. I shall hold them twice, once in every six months.
 H. Is there this custom in this country only, or in England also ?
 E. This custom was first instituted in our country, and following it, they are holding them here also.
 H. In your country is the school for boys and girls one and the same, or are the schools separate ?
 E. In our country the schools for boys and girls are separate, and not mixed.
 H. In this country it is not so, Sir. If girls study, the school is one and the same for all.
 E. I have heard that amongst you it is not the custom for females to study. What have they to do with schools ?
 (Lit. Amongst you there is not the custom by which women study. What work (have they) with school ?)
 H. It is not so, Sir. Some educate their girls ; but usually all do not do so, only a few individuals here and there. They say—" What is the advantage of women having learning ! If they get learning, they will not pay due reverence and attention to their husbands"—and so usually they do not educate them.

- E. That argument is a fine one ! (Ironical). If they get learning, they will understand what is proper and improper. But if they do not get it, how will they understand ?
- H. Some, Sir, although they have learning, have not the perception of what is proper or improper. It is rather a natural gift. (Lit. It comes by men's individual nature.)

(E.) A CONVERSATION WHICH TOOK PLACE BETWEEN RAMAYYA AND SUBAYYA ABOUT A MARRIAGE.

- R. Open the door, please.
- S. Who is there ? (Lit. Who are they ?)
- R. I am Ramayya, Sir.
- S. Come in. Why have you come ? What do you want ?
- R. I have a little business in which your horse will be of assistance. Can you oblige me ?
- S. Why ? What business ?
- R. It is necessary (for me) to go to Masulipatam about a marriage.
- S. Whose marriage ?
- R. My son's.
- S. Who is going to give their daughter ? (Lit. Whose daughter will they give ?)
- R. Ramaswamy will give his daughter. (Lit. They will give Ramaswamy's daughter.)
- S. How old is the girl ?
- R. Five years old.
- S. When is the propitious time for the marriage ?
- R. An arrangement between us has not yet been effected.
- S. Is there any relationship between you and them ?
- R. No. But they are respectable persons.
- S. Why is there still an obstacle ?
- R. There is no obstacle ; but an arrangement has not yet been made about the money.
- S. How much money did they ask ?
- R. They told me to pay up to forty pagodas.
- S. Did they ask anything besides this ?
- R. No. They are not the people to ask in that manner.
- S. Well, there is no obstacle then !
- R. True. But I do not quite know what their intention is.
- S. If (perchance) an arrangement were made between you, would they give the bridegroom any present ?
- R. If they had it, they would give it. But alas ! they are in great poverty.
- S. Why ?

- R. This year they had no harvest at all.
- S. However deficient the harvest, will they not give the bridegroom ear-rings and rings?
- R. They live in the manner they do for the sake of respectability; but alas! they have nothing.
- S. But will they perform the marriage even somewhat well?
- R. They intend to perform it well, as far as their means allow them. (Lit. They are those to whom there is the intention which says—We must perform it well within that which has accrued to us.)
- S. Well, as I consider the matter, it seems to me (Lit. To my mind.) that they are suitable persons.
- R. If this connexion were formed, it would be well in all ways.
- S. What your luck will be (I do not know), but as I look at the matter, it seems as if it would be effected.
- R. Do you really think that it will be effected?
- S. Yes. But if you are in a hurry, the matter will not be accomplished.
- R. What must I do, if I am not in a hurry? (Lit. not having hurried, that which I shall do, what is it?)
- S. Remain quiet for a few days. We will see what will be the course that they will pursue.

LETTERS.

(F.) FIRST LETTER.

To (the presence of) Mr. Sinith.—

Your Munshi Rámayya (sends) many salaams.

Here in Rájahmundry (all is) well. It rests with you kindly to favour me with news of your health and prosperity.

After you had gone from here to Sarasvathipuram, I too made an attempt to start immediately; but as I was so doing, fever attacked me, and so I fasted five days, and suffered much. At present I am better; but as I am very weak, it would, I think, be very difficult (for me) to come walking, and so I am proposing to start after a week more (has elapsed), and to pay you a visit, and then to take leave of you, and go to the south country.

Moreover I have not yet succeeded anywhere in getting money for my marriage. I do not know what God's will is in the matter. A good undertaking is always accompanied with many hindrances, according to the (Sanskrit) saying—“There are many obstacles to what is good.” Hence what I have purposed is beset with many inconveniences. I do not know how it will turn out. As you are my chief patron, I trust you will devise some means by which my object may be accomplished. I need not write more (on this point), for you yourself well know that if you, who are my chief patron, and kindly disposed towards me, disregard me, others will do so altogether. I therefore earnestly beg you to show me great favour, and to save me (out of my difficulties). I beg that you will (kindly) mention that I sent many salaams to (your) lady. You must (kindly) mention that I asked much after Subbarayudu Gáru. I shall be much pleased, if you kindly send me a favourable letter in reply. You must kindly take (this letter) into consideration.

(G.) SECOND LETTER.

To (the presence of) Mr. Smith.—

Your Munshi Rámayya sends many salaams, and makes the following request. (Lit. The request which your Munshi Rámayya has written, having made many salaams.)

Here all is well. I beg (you) to keep writing, and sending me (accounts of) your health and prosperity (there).

(Afterwards.) The letter which you wrote on the 12th of December having reached (me), I understood the contents. You wrote that after starting from here and getting on board the boat, you arrived at Sarasvathipuram at two o'clock the next day, and that by going about there in the sun you had a bad headache. When I heard this, I was very grieved. You must be very careful about your bodily health. Otherwise, you know very well that you will suffer greatly; so I trust that you will be very careful. (Lit. The thing which says—"trouble will happen—" is evident to your mind.)

I was very delighted, when I heard that you had got a son. As I am very auxious to see your son's Bhárasála (i. e. the ceremony of name-giving), I am praying God to fulfil my desire.

In however many ways I make an effort about my marriage, I cannot succeed in raising the money. For this reason I am prevented from going to Cocanáda, and so for the present I have given (it) up. When I purposed to come to Sarasvathipuram, and visit you, I had fresh attacks of fever, and so I am very weak, and quite unable to come on foot. As divine favour does not rest upon me, I am in many ways suffering inconveniences and troubles. I do not know what God is going to do (with me) in the future.

Owing to your absence I cannot come to any determination. And so I am looking out for your return, just as cuckoos look out for the rain. I earnestly hope you will soon return.

I beg you to be very kind to me. You must take this letter into your kind consideration.

(H.) THIRD LETTER.

To Mr. Smith—

The humble request of Adavi Kondayya, resident at Sarasvathipuram.

When you and your lady, as a piece of good luck for me, visited our village in your ride, you saw my palmyra leaf house, and perceived that I was a poor man; and so you kindly said that you would provide a free education for my second son Subbayya, and procure some help for me for the support of my family. I am desirous to support my family through your patronage. I am now obliged to support ten persons, (namely) four sons, one daughter, a mother, etcetera. You kindly said that you would grant me something; but I do not know (your intention) in what way you proposed to protect me and my family, or what help you will give.

It is not my wish that my son should be in the school of the Koppáka villagers. You must (kindly) grant him a teacher's situation in your school, with a class which he is able to teach, and of which you approve, and allot him as large a salary as your kindness can allow. If not, you must (kindly) give as much help as you please for our support, and educate him for two years more, and (thus) make him fit for a higher salary.

On the very day of the house-warning, after I had performed the marriage of my eldest son, thieves broke into my house, and stole all my money, up to six hundred rupees. On account of this I am heavily in debt, and am in great trouble, as there is not enough for food and clothing.

I beseech your majesty to pity me, and in some way or other to procure support for myself and my family, and (thus to) save us (from ruin). I am desirous to pay you a visit once a week. You must take (this letter) into your kind consideration. (Lit. You must bring (it) into your noble mind.)

(K.) FOURTH LETTER.

To Mr. Smith—

The request which your disciple Koppáka Subbayya makes, with many salaams, is as follows :—

I wrote a letter to you recently, which you will have received ere this. (Lit. I wrote-for-myself a request through a letter in your name.) A few days ago, when they gave the cold-season holidays to the school in which I teach, I went as far as Rajahmundry, to pay you a visit. But upon arriving there, I found that you had already been to Rajahmundry with your family, and after staying there a few days, had gone to Gunttoor; so I returned home. As I now understand from my brother's letter that you have come back to Sarasvathipuram, I have again written (this letter). As it is a long time since I visited you, it is my desire to come and pay you a visit, if you will allow me to do so. Kindly take the matter into consideration.

(L.) FIFTH LETTER.

To Mr. Smith.—

The request which your Munshi Rungacháryulu writes, with many salaams, is as follows—

The letter which you lately wrote from Bangalore having reached me, I understood its contents. I was very glad to hear from your letter (Lit.) It having been understood by the letter which you caused to be written.), that owing to the climate of Bangalore suiting you very nicely, both you and your lady are enjoying good health.

As our deceased father's annual ceremony is drawing near, if you will give me leave for ten days, I will go to another village, and get the ceremony performed, and then return. Because in this village I have no suitable relations, and there are no vegetables. There are several such like inconveniences. If therefore you will grant me leave, I will go to a village in which our relations live, and perform the ceremony, and return very quickly.

I have written the story-book which you told (me) to write, and have got (it) ready. As there have been no showers here, all the fields have dried up. Only the cool wind things (as) cholam, etcetera, are in a good condition. The sesamun fields have been blighted. It appears as if some how or other this year there will be a little scarcity. You must kindly take (this letter) into consideration.

(M.) SIXTH LETTER.

To Mr. Smith—

The request written by the village Munsiff of Sarasvathipuram—The letter which you wrote to-day having reached me, I understood its contents. You have written, that if I will send a thousand palmyra leaves and two bundles of fibre, to put up a shed near your house, you will pay the price of them. Accordingly I have had an order issued to the toddy-drawers. The leaves will come in two or three days, and so I write to inform you.

You wrote that you wanted a carpenter. At the present time the carpenters have made an agreement that they will not go (to work) unless they give them a rupee for each man per day. If you give (me) permission on these terms, I will send (a man). I beg you will let me know when I can pay you a visit. (Lit. When if I come, I may make your visit.) You must take (this letter) into your kind consideration.

STORIES.

(N.) FIRST STORY.

In former times there was a King named Krishnarāyula. His mother was for a long time suffering much from sickness, and used to ask him for every thing that she wanted. The son accordingly used to supply (every thing). At length, at the time when her death was near at hand, she much wished for a mango, and asked her son (for one), whereupon he sent servants to the garden to get the fruit. Before they brought it she died. The king grieved very much that his mother's desire was not accomplished (Lit. Having said—"The desire of self's mother went not having been accomplished. Was it not so ?), and after a few days had elapsed, he had some golden mangoes made, and began to give (them) to the Brahmins.

When his wife found this out, she thought—my husband is spending money to no purpose; though he does spend (it), will the wish of my deceased mother-in-law be accomplished? But as she was afraid to speak to her husband (about it), she called Tenáli Rámakrishna, who was a poet in the king's household, and told him that the king was stupidly spending all his money, and that in some way or other he must stop it. When she told him this, he said—"very well"—and went and sat down in the king's porch, and took to his own house each Brahmin who came out, after having received the golden mango from the king, and branded each of them (with a red hot iron.)

Afterwards the Brahmins went to the king crying, and made a complaint. When the king called Rámakrishna, and asked him, he replied—"My mother too had an attack of rheumatism, and as it did not get better, however many medicines I administered, she at last said, that if they branded her, she would recover. But as I was making the attempt to have her branded, she died, and so to fulfil my mother's desire, I branded the Brahmins." Hereupon the king felt much ashamed (of himself), and remained silent, being unable to say a word.

(O). SECOND STORY.

In a certain town a certain Shopkeeper borrowed an elephant from a Mahomedan, for his son's wedding. As he was performing the business, one day the elephant happened to die. Afterwards, the shopkeeper went to the Mahomedan, and told him that his elephant had died, and that he would give him the value of it. He, however, would not agree, but said that he wanted his own elephant only. The shopkeeper entreated him in many ways, saying—"I will buy and give you a better elephant even than your own. Or else, I will give you even a hundred rupees more than the price fixed upon by several persons." Nevertheless the Mahomedan would not listen, but replied that he wanted his own elephant again.

Then the two complainants went to the judge (named) Maryáda Rámayya, and related their business; whereupon he too in several ways said (just as the shopkeeper had said), that the Mahomedan must take either an elephant, or the value of one. Nevertheless he would not listen.

At length the judge being bothered to death, said—"You must come to-morrow, and I will consider the matter"—and then he sent them both away. After a little time he sent privately for the shopkeeper, and told him the following stratagem. "To-morrow put your house door half open, and put some old pots in a pile behind it, and keep (them there), and do not come, till I send you word." He then sent him away. The shopkeeper accordingly procured some old pots, and put seven of them in a pile behind his door, and did not go to the court. The Mahomedan was ready at the time mentioned by Maryáda Rámayya, and asked him to settle his complaint. Thereupon the judge got very angry and said—"Has not the shopkeeper come yet?" And then he said to the Mahomedan,—"You go and drag him here." The Mahomedan with joy (at the thought) that the judge would decide in his favour, went exultingly to the shopkeeper's house, and opened the door which was put half open.

As soon as he did so, all the old pots, which were placed behind it, were smashed to pieces. Then the shopkeeper hearing the sound of the pots being smashed, came out, and reviled the man, saying—"Why have you smashed my pots"? And then he went to Maryáda Rámayya, and made the following complaint—"Sir, this Mahomedan has smashed the pots which I have kept hid for many generations. I cannot procure such pots again." The Mahomedan acknowledged that he had smashed them, and said that he would buy and give new pots in exchange for the old pots; but the shopkeeper would not agree. When Maryáda Rámayya also spoke to the shopkeeper to the same effect, he would not listen, and so at length Maryáda Rámayya gave his decision as follows—"It is impossible to restore either a dead elephant or broken pots. Therefore the one is the equivalent of the other."

(P.) THIRD STORY.

In a certain town there lived a certain king, who took counsel with his Prime-minister as follows—"All kings are holding court in the daytime, and sleeping at night; if we too do, as they do, it is not nice." And so he determined to hold his court at night, and to sleep in the day time. Accordingly besides commanding that all the people in his dominions should shut their doors, and sleep all the day time, and should do all their business, taking meals etcetera, at night, and that the police should patrol in the day time, he said also that he would punish those who did not do so.

As things were going on in this fashion, one day at the time of the second watch two Brahmins, who were very hungry, came from a certain country to a village which was in this king's dominions, and seeing all the house doors shut, they were much surprised, and as they were very hungry, they knocked at a door, and called the inmates. Thereupon the police who were patrolling in accordance with the king's command, came to the place where these Brahmins were knocking at the door and calling, and thinking that they were thieves, they seized them, and took them to the king, and related the whole matter. Afterwards, when the king related the circumstances to his Prime-minister, the latter replied that they must hang them. Then the king gave the following order to the police—"In fifteen days we shall have these two Brahmins hung. Until then, you must keep them in prison." While these two were thus in prison, they began to fight between themselves. When the police who were on guard, asked them why they were fighting, they replied—"What have you to do with our (private) matters?" And they kept on fighting very much every day. The police were very much surprised at this, and informed the king. When the king called the Brahmins, and asked them, they replied—"Any how you are going to have us hung, are you not? What then have you to do with our (private) affairs?"

Afterwards, when the king asked in a very pressing manner, they at last spoke as follows—"We performed a sacrifice for many years upon a certain hill. The goddess that was there appeared to us, and said—You will go to a certain country. There a certain king will hang you both. Then the one who is hung on the northern branch will become king of all the earth, and the one who is hung on the southern branch will become Prime-minister." (Hereupon) they began to quarrel again even before the king, just as they had done in prison, one saying,—“I came first, and so I will be hung on the northern branch”—and the other saying—“I came first, and so I want the noose on the northern branch.”

When the king saw all this, he thought—We are reigning over one country only; these men will reign over all the earth,—so he took counsel on the matter with his Prime-minister, who gave the following advice—"If we hand over to these two Brahmins this kingdom over which we now reign, and are hung instead of them, we shall reign over all the earth." The king agreed to this, and handing over his kingdom to these Brahmins, he hung himself, and died. Thus the covetous will go to ruin through stupidity like this king.

In a certain village there were living in the same house a mother, a father, a son, and a daughter-in-law, who were all deaf. When the son (one day) went to the fields to work, he took with him a white bullock, and a black bullock, and was ploughing his field.

At that time a peon, who was going along the road, beckoned with his hand, and asked him where the road went to. Hereupon the farmer thinking that he was bargaining with him for the bullocks, replied—"The price of this white bullock is thirty pagodas." The peon said that he was not asking about the bullocks, but about the road. To which the farmer replied—"I will not give this black bullock for less than twenty pagodas." The peon perceiving that he was deaf, went on his way.

Just at this time, as it was midday, the farmer's wife brought some food, and put it (ready) for her husband. After the meal was finished, when the two were sitting in the field, talking pleasantly together, the husband, feeling particularly loving to his wife, showed his ox-goad, which was in his hand, to his wife, saying—"If I sell the bullocks, I will have some golden bars made this size, and give them to you." Hereupon his wife thinking that he said that he would beat her with the ox-goad, was very angry, and went away, saying that she would tell her mother-in-law. Afterwards she went home, and seeing her mother-in-law sitting in the road, eating a mash, she complained saying—"When I had had all the trouble of going in the sun, and taking your son his food, he said that he would beat me."

Then the mother-in-law thinking that her daughter-in-law was blaming her about the mash that she was eating, was very angry, and said—"I am eating what my own husband got, but I am not eating your father's goods." Then she went into the house, and told the matter to her husband. Then he, thinking that his wife was angry about the mash which he was eating, said—"I am not taking and eating any more mash than what you gave me, when you were going outside."

PUBLIC DEPARTMENT.

Proceedings of the Madras Government.

*Read letter from the Rev. A. H. Arden, M. A.
Order thereon, Ootacamund, 9th August 1879. No. 1226.*

The Government regret they are not in a position to give Mr. Arden the pecuniary assistance towards the publication of his books, solicited in the penultimate paragraph of his letter. The practice of subsidising works of this character has been for some time given up.

His Grace in Council does not doubt that a Grammar which has met with such high approval from very competent critics will be adopted by all students of Telugu, in supersession of works on the same subject by previous scholars.

(True Extract.) ..

(Signed) C. G. MASTER,
Ag. Chief Secretary.

OPINIONS ON ARDEN'S TELUGU GRAMMAR.

(A.) OPINIONS RECEIVED FROM ENGLAND.

- (1.) From T. HOWLEY, Esq. Professor of Telugu Oxford, and formerly at King's College, London.

Your Telugu Grammar having received the imprimatur of such eminent Dravidian Scholars as Dr. Caldwell and Dr. Pope, might well dispense with any further testimony as to its undoubted merits. I have been using your Grammar as a class book for the last four or five years, and hence I am able to speak from experience as to the great services you have rendered to Telugu students by its publication. Since I began to use your book, I have observed that the progress made by my pupils has been very rapid—a circumstance which I ascribe to the excellent method you have adopted.

- (2.) From Rev. J. SHARP, M. A. Professor of Telugu in the University of Cambridge.

I have now had five months experience in using Arden's Telugu Grammar in instructing Civil Service beginners in the language, and my opinion of its value has been very much strengthened by this practical acquaintance with its usefulness and suitability. Such a book would have saved me infinite toil in learning Telugu 17 years ago, It was much needed, and goes on the right tack. A Telugu Reader to correspond to it is now a great want.

- (3.) From J. GOLDINGHAM, Esq. (Late M. C. S.) Examiner in Telugu to the Civil Service Commissioners.

On first seeing Arden's Telugu Grammar I was struck with its lucid arrangement. Further acquaintance with it has confirmed this impression, and shewn me its suitableness for acquiring a knowledge of the language. Part I is particularly suited to beginners, and if thoroughly mastered will give the student a power which will make every after step easy. The arrangements throughout are lucid, and evince a close acquaintance with the language. The Grammar is a valuable addition: I trust Government will come forward with their patronage.

(4.) From H. MORRIS, Esq. Late M. C. S.

I have not had any necessity to refer to Mr. Arden's excellent Grammar of late, but I remember perusing and commenting on some of the earlier proof-sheets which the author submitted to me; and I glanced over the remainder of the work. It struck me as a very clear and lucid Grammar, admirably adapted for the use of those who desire to acquire a knowledge of the colloquial language.

(B.) OPINIONS RECEIVED IN INDIA.

(1.) From Col. R. M. MACDONALD, Director of Public Instruction, and formerly Inspector of Schools in the Telugu Country.

I have gone through the whole book, and think your work supplies a real want. Mr. A. D. Campbell's Grammar is throughout written too much under the inspiration of Native Grammarians, and introduces the explanation of sundhi, and other matter appertaining to the higher dialect, at far too early a stage. Mr. C. P. Brown's Grammar is deficient in clearness of arrangement, and is disfigured by prolix statements and irrelevant digressions. It should be the aim of every beginner to commence by trying to master the ordinary colloquial dialect, and then to pass on, if necessary, to the higher dialect. Your book will enable him to do this. It is the clearest and easiest introduction to the study of the language with which I am acquainted.

(2.) From G. OPPERT, Esq. M. A., P. H. D. Professor of Sanscrit, Presidency College, and Telugu Translator to Government.

As your Grammar appeared only a short time after I had commenced the study of Telugu, I availed myself of your book, and derived a great deal of benefit from its careful* perusal. I can therefore speak from practical experience. The Grammars of Campbell and Brown are too difficult for a beginner. Your Grammar was to me a great boon, especially as it gave the rules in an easy progressive style, so different from what I had been accustomed to. The first two parts comprising the colloquial dialect, are so clear, and contain such an amount of useful matter, arranged in so lucid a manner, that I was not tired of reading them over and over again.

(3.) From the Right Rev. BISHOP CALDWELL, D. D.

Arden's Grammar is in my opinion the Grammar for an Englishman wishing to learn Telugu.

(4.) From the Rev. G. U. POPP, D. D.

Mr. C. P. Brown's Grammar lacks method and proportion. All is huddled together, and many important things are so mixed up with unimportant or recondite facts, that the student is bewildered. Your Grammar leads a scholar on by easy steps, through all that is essential, until he arrives at a point where he can judge for himself. I think you have conferred a great favour upon all Telugu aspirants.

(5.) From the Rev. J. HAY, chief reviser of the Telugu Bible Translation Committee.

I have read, I may say studied your grammar, and regard it as by far the best help to acquiring an accurate knowledge of Telugu, which has yet been published.

(6.) From the Rev. J. CLAY, S. P. G. who has frequently been University Examiner in Telugu.

I have carefully revised your Telugu Grammar, and consider it well adapted for the purpose you have in view, namely to enable English-speaking foreigners to acquire a thorough knowledge of colloquial Telugu. It is a book much needed. For systematic arrangement and lucidity of exposition I consider your book in advance of Brown's or Campbell's Grammar. I can see that your experience as a teacher of Telugu youths has been of good service to you in the admirable arrangement of the subjects. Telugu youths studying English will find the book a great help to them in learning English, as they will be able to find out from it readily what Telugu forms correspond to the various kinds of English sentences.

(C.) SOME OF THE OPINIONS RECEIVED FROM MEMBERS OF THE MADRAS CIVIL SERVICE.

(1.) From J. G. HORSFALL, Esq. M. C. S.

I have no hesitation in saying that yours is the best Telugu Grammar yet published, and is generally admitted to be so.

(2.) From G. D. LEMAN, Esq. M. C. S.

I am very glad to give my testimony to the value of your Grammar. I wish I had had one as good, when I was a student in college. I consider it to be for the purpose for which it is intended the best book that I have come across. It was a book very much needed, for however good C. P. Brown's Grammar may be, it is most puzzling to a beginner.

(3.) From W. WILSON, Esq. M. C. S.

I have gone through part I and II, and think that there is no other Grammar that can compare with yours as a guide to Telugu.

(4.) From J. R. DANIEL, Esq. M. C. S.

Your book appears to me to contain in well arranged order every thing that it is necessary to know regarding Telugu Grammar. Though it came out after my student days, I frequently refer to it. There is no other Grammar to compare with it.

(5.) From W. F. GRAHAM, Esq. M. C. S.

I consider your Grammar the best that I am acquainted with for the use of persons begining the study of Telugu. It is specially useful to persons wishing to acquire as quickly as possible a colloquial knowledge of the language. There is no doubt that it ought to be put int the hands of a beginner in preference to Mr. C. P. Brown's Grammar.

(6.) From R. SEWELL, Esq. M. C. S.

I have never heard two opinions about your Telugu Grammar. It is admitted by all to be the best Grammar yet published, and I sincerely trust that you may be able to publish a volume of exercises. They will be of the greatest value to students of the language.

(7.) From L. A. CAMPBELL, Esq. M. C. S.

As a practical work of real use to the man who wishes to learn to speak Telugu and understand colloquial idioms, your Grammar seems to be all that can be desired. I am not competent to speak of part III, but I have again gone over parts I and II, and can only say that I wish they had appeared ten years sooner.

(8.) From C. L. B. CUMMING, Esq. M. C. S.

It is a plain, practical Grammar, simply and clearly arranged (the type used facilitating such arrangement) so as to lead the beginner by easy steps into a complete knowledge of colloquial Telugu. It is for this reason more suited to beginners than Mr. C. P. Brown's confused and over burden work. I may add that I have found it highly useful for my own study of the language.

N. B. To those several more might be added.

(D.) OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

(1.) Extract from the MADRAS MAIL.

Mr. C. P. Brown's book is spoiled by irrelevant matter. It is vexatious to the student to find after reading a whole page, that perhaps two lines contain all he wants to know. Mr. Arden's Grammar is decidedly calculated to supersede its predecessors. Its progressive form and exercises make the acquisition of Telugu vastly more easy, and the separation of the colloquial from the grammatical has cleared away a great amount of matter that was of no use whatever to persons while learning the spoken language, but only puzzled, confused, and over-burdened their minds. In smoothing down difficulties and lightening labour, Mr. Arden has done a material service to the public.

(2). Extract from the MADRAS ATHENÆUM.

This is in very respect an excellent work. In its progressiveness consists its chief merit. Nothing is anticipated, and throughout the way is made as smooth as any language way can be. The author has effected a complete separation between the colloquial and grammatical dialects. This plan cannot fail greatly to facilitate the acquisition of a colloquial knowledge of the language, for its clears away hundreds of forms and expressions which no native ever dreams of using, but with which all native Grammars and those hitherto published by Europeans are more or less heavily burdened. We speak after many years study of Telugu, when we say that while there is hardly a single form of colloquial expression which is not instance, explained, and illustrated with abundant clearness, there is at the same time no form of expression which is superfluous. What appears to us a special feature of the book is the number and excellence of the examples. They are perfectly natural and idiomatic, and the student who adopts them as his standard will learn to talk Telugu not indeed "like a book," but precisely in the same way as the natives themselves talk it. Part III is regarded by the author as an introduction to the Grammatical dialect. To our minds it goes much further; and we should think that this portion of the work would prove especially useful to those who are thinking of offering themselves for the "high proficiency" or "honors" Examination. We congratulate Mr. Arden upon having supplied a public need.
